INVERURY KEITH HALL, PORT ELPHINSTONE AND

KINTORE, THE PARISH OF KEITH HALL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

INVERURY is a parish, lying at the termination of the peninsula, between the river Urie on the North and the Don on the South—the town which is a royal burgh, is 16 miles N.W. of Aberdeen, 22 S.W. of Huntly, and 5 W. by S. of Old Meldrum; pleasantly situated on the neck of land formed by the confluence of the streams before-mentioned. Tradition reports that Inverury was erected into a royal burgh, by King Robert Bruce, on the occasion of a signal victory obtained by him, in the neighbourhood, over Comyn, Earl of Buchan, the King of England's general in Scotland. The oldest charter is a novodamus by Queen Mary, the preamble of which states that Inverury had been a royal burgh time immemorial, but that the charter of its erection had been lost during the civil wars. The town is now governed by a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and four councillors; and it joins with Kintore, Peterhead, Banff, Cullen and Elgin, in sending a member to parliament. Inverury confers the title of Baron on the Earl of Kintore, who has a fine mansion a little to the east of the town. By means of the influence and under the patronage of this noble man, a bridge was erected, in 1791, over the Don, at an expense of £2,000; and, subsequently, another was carried over the Urie. The Aberdeen Town and County, the British Linen Company, the North of Scotland, and the Union Banking Companies, have each a very respectable Branch establishment here. There is also a savings' bank. Inverury has become a favourite resort during the summer months—the Don and the Ury, affording ample sport to the angler, who may have full permission through Mr. Arnand, Kintore Arms Hotel. This hotel is replete with comfort. It has hot, cold and shower baths and a choice library for the use of visitors. The opening of the Great North of Scotland Railway from Aberdeen to Inverness, which, has a respectable station here, and a branch line to Old Meldrum has given a new stimulus to industry, and the town which is well lighted with gas has a respectable and thriving appearance. The tan works of Mr. Davidson are on an extensive scale, and at the contiguous village of PORT ELPHINSTONE, are established meal, bone, and saw mills, paper making, and a brewery; here also have been erected, several respectable residences, and a subscription school opened. The places of worship in the parish are, Established and Free churches, and Episcopalian, Independent, and Methodist chapels, and a handsome Roman Catholic Chapel. A Free school under the management of the office bearers of the Free church is respectably attended, and ably conducted by the Misses Reid. The other various educational establishments are noticed in the list of schools. Markets are held fortnightly, on Tuesday, from the 16th of November, to the 12th of April. The other markets are held on the 27th of April, 18th of May, (F.M.) 6th of June, 5th and 21th of July, 18th of August, 13th of September, and 18th of October.

KINTORE is likewise a royal burgh, and the capital of its parish—the town, which is small, is between 3 and 4 miles S.E. from Inverury; situated on the public road, near the Don, and to the east of the canal above-noticed. The burgh is governed by a provost, two baillies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, assisted by a council of eight other burgesses; and it is, as before-stated, a contributory burgh, in returning a member to parliament. In this parish are numerous cairns and tumuli, which are said to point out the position where Robert Bruce overtook and destroyed the army of Edward I., after the defeat of Comyn, Earl of Buchan, near Inverury; and within the parish is Hall-Forest castle, formerly a hunting seat of King Robert, now the property of the Earl of Kintore to whom three-fourths of the parish belongs. Two churches, respectively of the establishment and Free, with schools in connexion, are in the parish.

KEITH-HALL and KINKELL form a united parish, in the district of Garioch; lying on the left banks of the Urie and Don, which rivers unite opposite its centre. The parish is hilly but not mountainous; the western part is tolerably fertile, and produces good crops, but the eastern is much less fruitful. It is recorded, that many who fell in the battle of Harlaw—among others, Scrimgeour, the high constable of Dundee, was buried at Kinkell, which, at that period, was the principal church in this part of the country. The Earl of Kintore has a seat in this parish.

Station, opposite the Kintore Arms Hotel ...Robert Murray, station master

CARRIER.

To ABERDEEN, James Stephen, every Tuesday and Friday, from Inverury

KINCARDINE-O'NEIL, CHARLESTOWN OF ABOYNE
AND GLENTANNER, BIRSE AND LUMPHANNAN.

KINCARDINE-O'NEIL is a parish and village—the latter the seat of a presbytery, is seated on the public road, and the banks of the Dee, between Aberdeen and Ballater, 26 miles from the former, 16 from the latter, and 24 from Stonehaven. The buildings which principally surround the church, command an extensive prospect up the river, towards the Grampian mountains, and the place is much resorted to for the summer retirement of invalids. In early days Kincardine was of some note, for, it is upon record that, a wooden bridge was built across the Dee, six hundred years ago, the expense of which was defrayed by a knight, called Allan Durward. The parish, which is about seven miles in length, by six in extreme breadth, is partly hilly and pastoral, and partly arable, while in some places, are thriving plantations. The greater proportion of the inhabitants are occupied in agriculture, and others are employed by the manufacturers of Aberdeen, in knitting worsted stockings. The village contains a very good inn and posting-house—the 'Gordon Arms,' the premises are of considerable antiquity, some parts having been built more than a century. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, and on the Wednesday and Thursday after the last Tuesday in August, (o. s.).

CHARLESTOWN, (or Charlestown of Aboyne,) now generally called ABOYNE, is a small village in the parish of Aboyne, district of Mar, about four miles from Kincardine; situated on the north bank of the Dee. The parish is united to that of Glentanner, and is watered by the river just named, and likewise by the Tanner and the Allachy, which during heavy rains become impetuous streams. The forest of Glentanner is extensive, and bears some large timber. The Dee is here crossed by a very handsome suspension bridge, built at the sole expense of the Marquess of Huntly, whose seat, Aboyne Castle ornaments this locality. In the grounds of the Castle is a remarkable stone, shaped like a coffin, with a cross cut upon it. Fairs are held on the third Wednesday in February, the second Wednesday in April, a moveable fair in June, the Friday next after the second Tuesday in July, the first Tuesday in October, and the second Wednesday in November, (most of these are old style.)

BIRSE, the most southern parish of Aberdeenshire, lies on the south bank of the river Dee, and forms nearly a square of ten miles. There are three districts in the parish, inclosed by the same number of ridges of hills, which take a south-westerly direction towards the Grampians from the river Dee; in the valleys formed by these ridges run two streams of water, the Feuch, and the Chattie. The proportion of uncultivated land is very considerable, but the old system of agriculture is giving way to modern improvements. The road from Dundee to Inverness passes through this parish. Large upright stones, cairns, and other monuments of antiquity, are frequently met with, as is limestone in abundance. The parish church is distant about 28 miles from Aberdeen.

LUMPHANNAN parish, about six miles in length and four in breadth, is nearly surrounded by hills. The name signifies 'the bare little valley;' but this designation is not, in the present day, applicable to the low lands, which are now well cultivated and fruitful. This is the district in which the usurper Macbeth is said to have been slain by Macduff, in the year 1057; the spot on which tradition asserts the combat to have taken place is about a mile north from the kirk, on the brow of a hill, where a large cairn of stones has been raised commemorative of the event, and corroborative of the finale of Shakspere's drama. Markets are held on every alternate Monday from May till November.

POST OFFICE, KINCARDINE-O'NEIL, Christina Cromar, Post Mistress.—Letters from parts NORTH and SOUTH arrive at a quarter before ten in the morning, and are despatched at eleven in the forenoon.

Letters from BRAEMAR, BALLATER and ABOYNE arrive at eleven in the forenoon, and are despatched at a quarter before ten in the morning.

POST OFFICE, ABOYNE Margaret Ewen, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive at half-past ten in the morning, and are despatched at twenty four minutes past ten in the forenoon.

Money Order Office open from nine in the morning until six in the evening.

NEW AND OLD DEER, LONGSIDE, MINTLAW,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW DEER parish lies almost in the centre of Buchan district, and extends fourteen miles from north to south, and about seven in breadth. The church, a neat edifice, and the village, which is tolerably well built, are situated about 30 miles north from Aberdeen. About two miles from the church stands an old castle, called Feddoratt, which appears to have been a place of considerable strength. There are a few remains of Druidical temples, and several tumuli—these, having been opened, were found to contain urns, enclosed in stone coffins. Three miles from New Deer is Brucklaw Castle, built in the year 1540, the seat of Alexander Dingwall Fordyce, Esq. M.P. The situation of the castle is most romantic, and the scenery delightful: the lawns are tastefully laid out, and the park is beautified and encircled by the waters of the Ugie. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday in October, old style.

OLD DEER parish is ten miles in length, by a mean breadth of between five and six. Like New Deer, it lies in the district of Buchan, and contiguous to the former parish; but the village is situated some five or six miles distant, 10½ west from Peterhead, and 26 north from Aberdeen by the Mintlaw road. One branch of the river Ugie intersects the parish about its centre, whilst another branch enters it for a short course on the north: upon these streams are several mills. A sheriffs' small debts-court is held in this parish in the months of January, June and October. The abbey of Deer, which stands about a mile from the village, was built in the beginning of the 13th century, by William Comyn, Earl of Buchan; it is mostly in ruins, but there is still enough remaining to show what it originally was. There were at one time no less than twelve Druidical temples, of which four, tolerably entire, are yet remaining: the Druids' temple at Buffie is the most conspicuous, and is an object of great attraction to the antiquarian and traveller. The pleasure grounds and woods of Pitfour will at once arrest the admiration of strangers. A fair is held at ATKY BRAE on the first Wednesday after the 19th of July, and DUSTAIN fair is held on the first Wednesday after the 19th of December: cattle markets are also held on the Thursday next after the 18th of February, the Thursday after the 18th of March, the Monday after the 17th of September, the Thursday after the 25th of October, and the second Tuesday in December.

LONGSIDE, also a parish in Buchan, contains the village of its name, which latter is about 30 miles north of Aberdeen, 6 west of Peterhead, and 4 from Old Deer. A handsome church was opened here for divine service on the 7th of August, 1836; an Episcopal chapel and a parochial school are also in the village. The village of MINTLAW, in this parish, is three miles from Longside, on the road leading from Aberdeen and Fraserburgh.

NEW MACHAR, CRAIG DAM, DYCE, FINTRAY, AND UDNEY.

NEW MACHAR is a parish in the district of Buchan, lying chiefly in Aberdeenshire, but partly in the county of Banff, it extends nine miles in length, by two and a half in breadth; the parish kirk is ten miles from Aberdeen. There is a station at Dyce, on the Great North of Scotland Line, which is about three and a-half miles from Summerville, the principal village in this parish. The country is generally rather flat, and the soil is mostly arable, with several patches of wet mossy land; while in the southern quarter are some fine plantations. There is a small lake, near the boundary of Old Machar, called Bishop's Loch, in which is an island, whereon stands the ruins of a castle once belonging to the bishops of Aberdeen.

CRAIG DAM, in the neighbourhood of Tarves, has a neat chapel of the United Secession, and a free-school endowed by a Mr. Peter Barron, of Harpley, in the county of Norfolk. The river Ythan passes through this district, watering a soil various in quality, but mostly fertile.

DYCE parish is of considerable extent, lying on the south bank of the Don, which river separates it from Fintray, and Newhills parish divides it from Old Aberdeen. The Tyre-begar ridge runs through the district from south to north; one of the loftiest hills is surmounted by a Druidical temple. The parish kirk is seven miles and a half from Aberdeen, and four from New Machar. The Great North of Scotland Railway Company have a station here.

FINTRAY parish is five miles in length, by from three to four in breadth. On the banks of the Don the land is fertile, and susceptible of profitable cultivation; but other parts are hilly. An abbey formerly existed in this parish—the Rev. J. Leslie, the late minister, possessed a stone inscribed with the date 1386—supposed to have formed a fraction of the building, and a silver cup, dated 1633, which tradition records to have been manufactured from the silver of the image of St. Meddin, the tutelar saint of the parish. The kirk is about ten miles and a half from Aberdeen. There is a station on the Great North of Scotland line, at KINALDIE, about one mile from the village of HADDON. Within the parish is a considerable mill for the manufacture of woollen goods, the machinery of which is worked both by steam and water power.

UDNEY parish extends about five miles in length and breadth, and contains a neat and pleasantly situated village, fourteen miles north of Aberdeen, and four from New Machar. The soil of the parish is for the most part fertile, and the land enclosed and well cultivated. It has a well conducted school. An annual fair is held on the third Tuesday in November, (o. s.)

OLD MELDRUM, BOURTIE AND TARVES.

OLD MELDRUM is a parish, a burgh of barony, and a market town—the latter pleasantly situated on the road from Aberdeen to Banff; 18 miles N.W. of the former, 27 from the latter, and five from Inverury. The streets and dwellings are irregularly laid out; the principal building is the town hall, which has a neat spire. Meldrum was constituted a burgh of barony in the year 1672, under the jurisdiction of two baillies; B. C. Urquhart. Esq., is superior of the burgh. The seat of this gentleman (Meldrum House) is romantically situated, and, from its antique style of architecture, possesses a striking effect; and being surrounded with fine scenery, presents the characteristics of a delightful residence. The principal branches of business are comprised in an extensive distillery, a brewery, and corn mill. The district is partly arable and partly pastoral; the soil of the southern portion is fertile, but that of the northern shallow, and less fruitful. The places of worship are, the Established and Free churches, and United Presbyterian, and Episcopal chapels. There are three excellent schools in the town. Markets are held fortnightly on Tuesday, from the 4th of January, to the 23rd of May, F.M. and one each in the months of June, July, August, September, October, November, F.M. December having two. Fairs are held on the Saturday next before the 26th of May, and on the Saturday before the 22nd of November, also a market for cattle, and grain on every alternate Tuesday, during the winter months.

BOURTIE, a parish, is four miles in length and two in breadth, generally cultivated; it lies between Meldrum and Inverury. About the middle of the parish there are two ranges of hills, the greater part clothed with refreshing verdure. The remains of ancient fortifications are visible throughout this district.

The parish of TARVES lies between Ellor and Old Meldrum; is bounded by Methlick on the north, and Old Meldrum on the west, and is watered in its eastern quarter by the river Ythan; its length is about nine miles, and its breadth six. The general outline of the parish is a flat surface, interspersed with some hills of inferior altitude. The soil is diversified in its composition, but is for the most part fertile; and there are some fine plantations on the verge of the river.

POST OFFICE, Old Meldrum, William Den, Post Master.—Letters from the South arrive (from Aberdeen) every morning at a quarter before nine, and from North and South every afternoon at ten minutes before four, and are despatched for all parts to Aberdeen every morning at eleven, and at ten minutes before twelve.

POST OFFICE. Tarves, Fanny Lumsden, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Aberdeen), every morning at ten minutes before nine, and night at half-past six. they are despatched at ten minutes before eleven in the morning, and half-past seven in the evening.

Money Order Office open from nine till six in the evening.

PETERHEAD,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF BODDOM, THE BAY OF INVERNETTIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS

PETERHEAD is a considerable sea-port town, a burgh of barony, and parish, within the district of Buchan, 141 miles N. by W. of Edinburgh, 34 S.E. of Banff, 32 N.E. of Aberdeen, and 18 S.S.E. of Fraserburgh. It is situated upon a peninsula (the most easterly point of Scotland), about a mile south of the mouth of the river Ugie, the isthmus between the peninsula and the mainland being only eight hundred yards wide. The town is built in the form of a cross, and is divided into four districts, called the Kirktown, Ronheads, Keith-Inch; and Peterhead Proper. The houses, which are built of granite (so abundant in various parts of the county), are all of them neat, and many of them commodious and elegant. The town is gas-lighted, and the inhabitants are plenteously supplied with excellent spring water. The wells of Peterhead have long been resorted to; the waters are chalybeate, and are abundant in the town and neighbourhood. Fossil shells in great quantities, and of various kinds, are found in the neighbourhood twenty or thirty feet above the level of the sea, and these of kinds not to be met with in an original state; many curious pebbles also may be picked up on the shore. A public building which claims particular attention is the town-house, at the head of the principal street: it is an elegant edifice, sixty feet long, and forty-nine feet wide, with a spire one hundred and ten feet high, and a fine clock; the town-hall one of the apartments, is a spacious elegant room; and one of equal dimensions is handsomely fitted up as a court-room, in which the baillie court hold their sittings; and here the sheriff's debt-court is held every Thursday. Peterhead was founded and erected into a burgh of barony, by George Earl Marischal, in the year 1593; but in 1715 it was forfeited by this family, in consequence of their adherance to the unfortunate house of Stuart, and purchased, with the neighbouring lands, in 1738, by the trustees or governors of the Merchant Maiden Hospital, Edinburgh, who are still the superiors. The nomination of the magistrates was, by charter, vested in them and the magistrates and councillors, the latter of whom were formerly elected by a majority of the feuars; but since the elective franchise was conferred upon the burgh, the magistrates and councillors are elected by the £10. voters. The town now enjoys the privileges of a royal burgh, and, in conjunction with Kintore, Elgin, Cullen, Banff, and Inverury, returns one member to parliament.

For a long series of years the harbours of Peterhead have been held to be of great importance. So early as 1661, in the first parliament of King Charles II, an act was passed 'For a contribution for repairing the harbours of Peterhead.' In 1705 an act of the Scottish privy council was obtained, for a voluntary contribution within all the parish churches of the three Lothians and hewest the Forth, for building and repairing these harbours; and in 1729, and again in 1739, the convention of royal burghs authorized a voluntary contribution throughout all the royal burghs in Scotland for the same purpose. In 1807, and again in 1827, acts of parliament were obtained for their further improvement; and since 1798 upwards of £105,000. have been expended on these improvements. The harbours are managed by a rotatory board of trustees, a certain number of which are elected annually. The revenue can be applied only to the maintenance of the harbours, the payment of the interest of the debt, and the liquidation of the principal; no individual or body of persons have any pecuniary interest in them. Within the last ten years upwards of £50,000. have been expended on the harbour improvements. The revenue for the year ending March, 1858, amounted to £4,391. 19s. 7d. Peterhead possesses the grand advantage of a north and south harbours, respectively of eleven and seven acres in extent, communicating by means of a canal or channel, over which an elegant and permanent cast iron swing bridge has been thrown, upon the construction of which upwards of £8,000. has been expended. In the north harbour there are two graving or dry docks, and at the entrances to both harbours are good lighthouses. There is a spacious bay, with good anchorage, on the south of the town, on the opposite side of which stands the Buchanness lighthouse, having a beautiful revolving light. The bay is perfectly safe in any sort of weather, except when the wind is eastward. The bridge over the canal that connects the harbours, forms the communication between the Keith-Inch and other parts of the town. The south harbour has twelve to fourteen feet water at medium springs, and eight to ten feet at neap tides; and the north harbour has, at spring tides, eighteeen feet water. At an early period its vessels traded to the ports in the Baltic, to the Levant, and to America; and in 1795 its merchants could fit out twenty-eight vessels, carrying upwards of 3,000 tons. The tonnage belonging to the port in the year 1849 amounted to 11,179, and was of the value of £120,000. and upwards. The general trade, coasting and foreign, in the same year, produced £4,000. in shore dues, the number of vessels entering the harbours inwards being nine hundred and sixty-five, and outwards nine hundred and sixty—of which ninety were from foreign parts, and one hundred and fifteen to foreign parts, chiefly Greenland, Norway, ports in the Baltic, and Hamburgh. The revenue of the harbours in 1800 was only £100., while, in 1849, it amounted to £4,000. and in 1858 to £4,391. 19s. 7d. In no subject is this community more deeply interested than in the whale and seal fisheries, many having their capital largely invested, and others their friends and relatives engaged in this important but hazardous branch of national industry. Seventy-one years have now elapsed since the first vessel sailed from Peterhead for the icy regions; and while many other ports have been declining, and some have given up the trade altogether, Peterhead has continued to flourish, and now takes the lead of all the British ports in the whale fishery. In the year 1788 one vessel was sent out, and up to 1803 there was no increase. From 1804 to 1814 the number varied from two to eight, and to 1830 from ten to sixteen; but in 1843 they had decreased to nine. Since then the number has continued to increase, the highest being thirty-two, including two steamers, added in 1857. The total produce of the fleet during the past seventy-one years may be stated at 3,766 whales, 1,031,847 seals, 48,735 tons of oil, 1,710 tons of whalebone, and the approximate value at £2,250,398. Taking one year, and not the most favourable, the harbour revenue arising from the Greenland vessels would be nearly £1,000. In 1838 a new impulse was given to the trade, by more attention being devoted to the seal fishing, which foreign vessels had successfully prosecuted for many years; this department is a most important item in the general revenue of the port. Greenland produce has been gradually increasing in value, and this remark applies particularly to seal-skins, which, in 1838, were sold at one shilling and threepence per skin; they are now worth from four shillings and sixpence to eight shillings each, Although the price of oil has been somewhat fluctuating, it has steadily been increasing in value. Some ten years since it only yielded about £28. per ton; but last year (1859) it could readily be disposed of at from £40. to £53. per ton. Whalebone has also risen in price: for many years it was sold at from £200. to £250. per ton, but can now be disposed of at from £500. to £550. per ton. From forty-five to sixty-five men are employed on each vessel—in all from fifteen to sixteen hundred; and the expense attending a voyage would vary from £1,000. to £2,000., according to the size of the vessel, number of men, and length of time at sea. The fleet for the present year (1860) involves a capital of not less than £200,000. A number of iron steam vessels were sent out, but experience has shown that they are unsuitable for the icy regions. In 1859 several were lost, having been crushed in the ice, and the whole injured to some extent. In the present year three new vessels have been added to the fleet, at an estimated value of £3,300. The herring fishery has also become most important, Peterhead having now attained the second rank in this branch of maritime industry, the number of vessels engaged annually being from three hundred and thirty to four hundred. In 1849 the quantity of herrings caught filled 61,844 barrels. Owing to the liberal encouragement, both by the superiors of the town and the trustees of the harbours, this fishery must go on rapidly increasing; and Peterhead may, in a few years, be reasonably expected to stand inferior to none as a fishing station. Independent of the fishing and shipping trades, the town enjoys a good local one. There are many respectable and well stored establishments, in the wholesale and retail business of grocery, drapery, &c. Five banking establishments are in operation here, one iron foundry, three ship and boat builders, several curriers, millers, extensive timber merchants, coach builders, and brick and tile manufacturers in the neighbourhood. Exclusive of the facilities which the granite quarries in the neighbourhood present for local purposes, they supply no inconsiderable item in the amount of exports. Between the years 1817 and 1822 inclusive, 35,112 tons of this stone were shipped at Peterhead, chiefly in large blocks, for the docks at London; but since that period the exportation has considerably decreased. The exports beside consist of cattle, oats, meal, pork, cheese, eggs, butter, herrings, oil, &c. The following are the items of agricultural produce shipped at this port from March 1st. 1849, to March 1st, 1850:—cattle, 732; pork, 297 barrels; butter, 2,313 firkins; eggs, 78 boxes; oats, 26,916 quarters; meal, 9,403 sacks; beans, 202 quarters; potatoes 10 bolls; and cheese, 21 cwt. A few years ago Peterhead ranked as a creek only, under the port of Aberdeen; but it has been made a separate and independent port, the limits of which extend from Rattrayhead on the north, to Ythan river on the south.

The Established church, situated at the conjunction of the south and west roads, combines elegance with convenience, and has a fine spire; and the Episcopal chapel is a handsome modern edifice, in the design of which the architect has displayed superior taste. The other places of worship are, one for the Free church, one for Independents, an United Presbyterian chapel, one for Methodists, a Baptist Meeting House, and a chapel for Roman Catholics. Amongst the literary institutes of Peterhead may be mentioned as the principal, a reading society, established in 1808, and a mechanics' institution, founded in 1836. The library belonging to the reading society numbers upwards of two thousand volumes, and the library of the mechanics about one thousand. There is also a solicitors' library. A very valuable museum, the property of the late Adam Arbuthnot, Esq., by whom it was bequeathed to the authorities for the use of the town, contains a great variety of specimens, collected from the animal and mineral kingdoms. There are many excellent schools, both of a public and private character, and a ragged school has been lately established, which is very efficiently conducted by one paid master, who is assisted by the humane and benevolent of both sexes of the town gratuitously. The first number of 'The Peterhead Sentinel,' a creditably conducted newspaper, was issued here on the 6th of June, 1856. Its principles are strictly liberal, and it enjoys an encouraging circulation, especially in the district of Buchan. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the third Tuesday in May and the second Tuesday in November, both old style.

BODDOM is a neat village and a considerable fishing station, in the parish of Peterhead, about four miles south of that town. The harbour here was extended a few years since by the Earl of Aberdeen, at a cost somewhat exceeding £2,000., and an act of parliament was passed in 1845, constituting Boddom a port or harbour. The fishery here is prosecuted with great diligence and success. A chapel of ease and a good parochial school, supplementary to Peterhead, are in the village.

INVERNETTIE BAY is likewise in the parish of Peterhead, and is chiefly inhabited by fishermen.

RHYNIE AND ESSIE, AUCHINDOIR AND KEARN,

WITH LUMSDEN, CABRACH, CLATT, AND KINNETHMONT

RHYNIE and ESSIE is a united parish in the district of Strathbogie; it comprehends a superfices of thirty square miles; bounded on the north by the barony of Gartly, on the south by Auchindoir, and on the west by Cabrach. The centre may be about ten miles south from Huntly. The soil is rich and fertile on the banks of the Bogie; towards the hills it is light and gravelly, yet productive. The only antiquity in this parish, deserving of notice, is a vitrified fort on the top of the hill of Noth. There are two springs in the neighbourhood of Rhynie, remarkable for the surprising quantity of water they discharge, each being capable of turning a mill at its source. A Free church, and a parochial school are established in the parish. Fairs are held on the Thursday before the second Wednesday in June, new style; and on the first Thursday in September and second Wednesday in October, o.s.

AUCHINDOIR, a parish with which Kearn has been incorporated, is about seven miles long and five broad, distant from Huntly twelve miles. A bluish coloured fibrous asbestos is found in great quantities in the fissures of the rocks, which the sportsmen frequently use for wadding to their fowling pieces. The parish also abounds with freestone. The only river of note is the Bogie. In this parish is a small village called LUMSDEN, erected within the last thirty years, and named after the proprietor. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in April, last Friday in May and third Tuesday in August, o. s.

CABRACH parish is partly in the county of Aberdeen, and partly of that of Banff; extending in length five miles, by about three in breadth; distant from Aberdeen 45 miles and from Huntly 20. The Deveron and the Fidditch water this parish. The mountains abound with game.

CLATT is a parish in Aberdeenshire — the village is situated 10 miles s. s. E. from Huntly and 33 W.N.W. from Aberdeen, on the rivulet Gardie, which afterwards falls into the Urie. It was elevated into a burgh of barony by James VI., in 1501, with power to hold weekly and annual markets. The superiority belongs to the family of Gordon, of Knockespock, who have evinced a laudable anxiety for the improvement of the place. A fair is held on the third Wednesday in November.

KINNETHMONT parish extends about six miles in length, by three in breadth, and is about 8 miles south from Huntly. The parish is watered by several small streams, and the general soil is fruitful.

POST OFFICE, RHYNIE.—James Roger, Post Master. Letters from all parts arrive from (GARTLY Station) at forty-five minutes past ten in the morning, and are despatched thereto at nine in the morning.

Money Order Office open from nine in the morning to six in the evening

ROSEHEARTY IN PITSLIGO AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

ROSEHEARTY is a maritime village and burgh of barony, in the parish of Pitsligo, 4 miles W. from Fraserburgh and 18 E. from Banff. It has a good harbour, capable of admitting vessels of from eighty to one hundred tons. The chief imports are timber, coals, and salt, and it exports fish and grain; its commerce, however, is not extensive. Although inconsiderable in size, it is a burgh of barony, having been raised to that distinction by Charles II. Within the parish are two or three private schools, a parochial one, and a female charity school.

The parish of PITSLIGO lies in the district of Buchan, on the sea-coast, betwixt Aberdour on the west and Fraserburgh on the east, and commencing about two miles west of Kinnaird Head. The land is generally fertile, and the face of the country level. Pitsligo Castle, formerly the seat of Lord Pitsligo (a title in the Forbes family), is an ancient structure, surrounded with extensive gardens. The labouring portions of the population are principally employed in fishing, and others in agriculture. PITTULIE and SANDHAVEN are two other small villages in this parish, both situated between Kinnaird Head and Rosehearty Point.

POST OFFICE, ROSEHEARTY, Thomas Robertson, Post Master.—Letters from the SOUTH arrive (from FRASERBURGH) every afternoon at ten minutes before two, and are despatched thereto at a quarter before ten at night.—Letters from the NORTH arrive (from BANFF) every night at a quarter before ten, and are despatched thereto at a quarter before two in the afternoon.

STRICHEN, ABERDOUR, TYRIE AND NEW PITSLIGO.

STRICHEN is a parish in the district of Buchan—the village a neat one, is 33½ miles N. from Aberdeen, 20 W. from Banff, 16 W. by N. from Turriff, 15 N. by W. from Peterhead, and 9 S. from Fraserburgh; situated on the north bank of the Ugie. The town house is a convenient and elegant structure, erected in the year 1816, by the Right Hon. Lord Lovat, at an expense of £2,000. The side of one of the hills in this parish is of white stone, in which is cut the figure of a horse, which has a singular effect at a distance. Upon the same hill is a hunter's lodge, on which is inscribed, 'This hunter's lodge Robb Gibb commands. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, an Episcopalian chapel, also one for the Roman Catholics, and the schools are, a parochial, a Free church, and two or three private ones. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday of January, the last Tuesday of February, the second Tuesday and Wednesday of May, the first Tuesday and Wednesday of July, the second Tuesday and Wednesday of August, and the first Tuesday and Wednesday of November, (o. s.)

ABERDOUR parish stretches along the Moray Frith for about ten miles. The shore here is so bold and precipitous, that there are only three places where boats can effect a landing: and the rocks have been excavated by the sea into innumerable caves, one of which is ninety feet long and twenty-two broad. Upon a precipice overhanging the sea are the ruins of the ancient castle of Dundargue: a place of great strength and importance in feudal times, and noted for sustaining a long siege in 1336, when Henry de Beaumont, the English Earl of Buchan, was obliged to capitulate to Andrew Murray, Regent of Scotland, during the unwarrantable captivity of King Robert Bruce, in England. The small village situated on the shore of Aberdour bay, is chiefly inhabited by fishermen.

TYRIE parish extends about ten miles in length, by four and a half in breadth; the surface is agreeably diversified with hill and dale, heath, moss, meadow, corn land, and grass parks. On the northern verge of the parish is the village church of Tyrie, an ancient structure, supposed to have been originally erected about the year 1004, when the Thane of Buchan routed the Danish army upon the neighbouring eminences. The late Sir William Forbes, founded, in the southern quarter of the parish, the village of NEW PITSLIGO, into which the weaving of linen has been introduced, and affords employment to some of its inhabitants.

TARLAND AND MIGVIE, COULL, AND LEOCHEL AND CUSHNIE.

TARLAND AND MIGVIE, united parishes, form a very irregular and disjointed district on the western borders of Aberdeenshire. The village of Tarland, which is a burgh of barony, is thirty-one miles from Aberdeen and sixteen from Alford; situated nearly in the centre of the district of Cromar. The lands about the village are mostly level, but the greater proportion of the parish is mountainous, and the seasons are cold; the woods which have been planted will, however, be the means of materially ameliorating the latter inconvenience. A small rivulet runs by the village and falls into the river Dee, near Aboyne village; and a detached part of the parish is watered by the Don. Branches, respectively, of the Union Bank of Scotland, and the Aberdeen Town and County Bank, have been lately established in this burgh; and a sheriff's small-debt court is held here four times a year, when claims are adjudicated to the amount of £8. 6s. 8d., or under. Fairs are held on the Wednesday next before the 5th of January, the last Wednesday in February, the Wednesday before the 26th of May, and the Friday after the last Tuesday in June (o. s.); on the Friday after Old Rhayne, and Tuesday and Wednesday after the 22nd of November (N. s.); and at Migvie a fair is held on the second Tuesday in March, (o. s.).

COULL is a parish in the district of Marr—the Kirk is about thirty miles from Aberdeen; lying at the head of Strathcromar, and separated from the Dee on the South by Aboyne. It is a finely sheltered tract of land triangular in shape, and generally fertile; the hilly portions being, however, bleak and pastoral. The ruins of the very old castle of Coull are distinguishable, but of its ancient possessors little is known.

LEOCHEL and CUSHNIE are united in one parish, and contain two ancient castles, now in ruins, called Linturk and Corse; in the latter were born several of the Forbes', one of whom (Patrick Forbes, of Corse), wrote a commentary on the Revelations. Craigievar, the elegant seat of Sir William Forbes, is also in this parish, and from its elevated situation commands an extensive prospect of the country. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in March, and the first Friday in November, (o. s.).

POST OFFICE, Craigievar, Francis Adam, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive at twelve at noon, and are despatched at seven in the morning.

TURRIFF and KING EDWARD,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF NEW BYTH.

Turriff is a free burgh of barony, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the parish of that name, 34½ miles N.N.W. of Aberdeen, 17 N.N.W. of Meldrum, and 11 S.S.E. of Banff, situate on a tributary stream of the Deveron, near that river. Its charter, dated the 10th of March, 1511, was granted by James IV. in favour of Thomas Dickson, prebend of Turriff; by this, the inhabitants were entitled to hold a weekly market on the sabbath day, and three fairs annually, each to continue eight days. A sheriff small debts' court is held quarterly in the Town's House, and justice of peace courts, as occasion may require, in the same building. Turriff is one of the most flourishing little towns in the north of Aberdeenshire. The place is clean and neat, and gas-lighted by a joint-stock company formed in 1837 In the same year a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland was established here and subsequently three other banks have been engaged in the monetary transactions of the place. There are also two good inns and posting houses.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and an Episcopalian chapel, and the schools comprise a parochial one, and a private academy, in which boarders are received. The vicinage of Turriff is of an agreeable character, and the neighbourhood is very respectable, and several families of distinction are among the residents. Forglen House, the seat of Sir Robert Abercromby, Bart. a few miles distant is one of the most elegant and imposing mansions in the north of Scotland. Fairs are held on the last Tuesdays in the months of January, March, May, and July, and the first Tuesday in December; in addition to which, there are eleven moveable markets held in the year

King Edward, properly Ken-Edar, a parish in the northern part of the county, is twelve miles in length from east to west, by from two to five in breadth: its western extremity being washed by the Deveron — on the north it is bounded by Gamrie, on the east by Fyvie, and on the south by Montquhitter and Turriff. The general surface is hilly and heathy, and not more than half the soil is arable; there are, however, extensive plantations, and the district is progressively improving. A streamlet, tributary to the Deveron, pursues a westerly direction through the parish; on its right bank stands the ruin of the ancient castle of Ken-Edar, once the seat of the potent Earl of Buchan. Within the south-eastern border is situate New Byth, a village formed in the course of the last century.

POST OFFICE, Turriff, Mr. John Duff, Post Master.—Letters from all parts South arrive (from Aberdeen) every morning at half-past ten and evening at a quarter-past seven, and are despatched thereto every morning at fifty minutes past six.

Letters from the North of Scotland arrive (from Banff) every morning at fifty minutes past six, and are despatched thereto every morning at half-past ten.

Money Orders are granted from nine in the morning till six in the evening.

POST OFFICE, King Edward Town, Robert Leggat, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Banff) every morning at six and afternoon at four, and are despatched thereto every morning at fifteen minutes past eleven, and afternoon at ten minutes past four.

POST OFFICE, New Byth, John Mair, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Turriff) every afternoon at two, and are despatched thereto every evening at eight.

ARGYLESHIRE,

OR, as it is frequently written Argyllshire, is a large county in the south-western extremity of the Highlands. What may be termed the continental part is bounded on the north by Invernesshire; on the east by that county, by Perthshire and Dumbartonshire; and on the south and west by bays and straits of the Atlantic Ocean. Its extreme length is one hundred and fifteen miles; its breadth averaging about thirty-three; and it has not less than six hundred miles of coast washed by the sea. The mainland, including the peninsula of Kintyre, has been computed to contain 2,735 square miles; while the islands connected with it are supposed to comprise 1,063 more: whereby the whole extent of land in Argyleshire may be estimated at 3,800 square miles. The county is divided into six principal districts—ARGYLE PROPER, COWAL, ISLAY, KINTYRE (or CANTYRE), LORN and MULL. Cowal is divided from Dumbartonshire by Loch Long, and bounded by Loch Fyne on the west; betwixt Loch Fyne and Loch Linnhe, and stretching away to the north, is Lorn; from which, on its south-west quarter, there extends, in a southerly direction into the Irish sea, the peninsula of Kintyre. The islands of Mull, Jura, and Islay, are divided from the continent, or from each other, merely by narrow sounds; and may be taken from their proximity and accessibility, as little else than portions of the mainland, surrounded by salt-water rivers. There are other districts of inferior size within the principal ones—as Ardnamurchan, the most westerly point of Sunart; Appin, a piece of Lorn bordering on Loch Linnhe; Glenorchy, another portion of Lorn on its eastern side; and Knapdale, occupying a position between Kintyre and Nether Lorn.

EARLY HISTORY.—This county, together with that of Perth, is presumed to have constituted the ancient Caledonian kingdom, while the Romans and Picts were in possession of the greater part of Scotland. In former ages the western coast of Argyleshire was perpetually exposed to the descents and depredations of the Danes and the Irish, but the original inhabitants never suffered them to penetrate any considerable distance into the interior: if an enemy landed, or was seen hovering on the coast, in the course of a few hours the whole country was alarmed, and the men repaired to the shore completely armed. The heroes celebrated by Ossian were a militia, established in Argyleshire, for the purpose of defending the country in any sudden emergency. Of old the chieftain was considered the father, rather than the master of his clan: his followers loved him with a degree of enthusiasm, which made them cheerfully undergo any fatigue or danger; and it was his interest, as well as his pride and glory, to requite so animated an adherance to the utmost of his power. The rent paid him was chiefly consumed in feasts given at the habitations of his tenants; on these occasions they all lived together as friends, and the departure of the chief always occasioned regret. The cattle and corn, formerly consumed at these feasts of hospitality, were, in more polished times, required to be brought to the landlord's mansion, and thus friendship degenerated into oppression. Campbell of Auchinbreck had anciently a right to carry off the best cow he could find, upon several properties, each Martinmas, by way of mart—the island of Islay paid five hundred such cows yearly; but this badge of slavery has been converted into a modus of twenty shillings a head. The inconveniences attending this state, arose from the petty quarrels between neighbouring clans, excited by a spirit of plunder, and absurd points of fantastical honour. At this period the Scottish kings had no authority over this part of the country; the M'Donalds of the Isles assuming royal powers, holding parliaments, and enacting laws, until the Bruces brought the disorderly clans into some kind of subordination. From this time, in their different wars with the English, the chiefs had recourse to the assistance of the Highlanders, with whom and the inhabitants of the low country, they contracted debts, rendering the condition of the middle classes worse, as the chiefs found it necessary to require an addition to their yearly revenue, and, in order to enforce obedience, reference was had to penal laws. In this respect the king was obliged to gratify his feudal barons; for they were always formidable to his throne. But when the laws presented any obstacle to their rapacious exactions, they openly set them at defiance: they erected gibbets, and hanged their tenants without trial or mercy. The evil became at last so flagrant, that a jury, and bailiff or sheriff, were introduced; but this measure did not remove the mischief; for the law officer was not unfrequently bribed to spare the real culprit, while the poorer, and more innocent, were considered fit subjects for the gallows. In 1748 these abominable jurisdictions were totally abolished; and no sooner were men emancipated from their fetters, than they began to improve their properties; and since that time, the face and condition of this country has undergone the happiest change. The ancient inhabitants of the Highlands of Argyleshire prided themselves on their endurance of hunger and fatigue; they were passionately fond of music and poetry; and the song and the dance soon made them forget their toils. Now the sound of the bagpipe is more rarely heard; the taste for poetry has disappeared; the deer have abandoned the mountains, and extensive forests are either converted into sheep walks, or have succumbed to modern cultivation.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The surface of this county is, like most other parts of the Highlands, mountainous, bleak, and uncomfortable to the view; hills, rocks, and huge mountains, rise upon each other in stupendous and fearful disorder. Glencroe and Glencoe, are perhaps, amongst the most awfully picturesque valleys that can be contemplated. The coast is rocky, but indented with navigable bays, and islets, which afford good harbours for shipping. The vales and flat parts are cultivated; the mountains feed great quantities of sheep and black cattle; the woods, of which there are still some, principally in the Breadalbane district, afford shelter to deer and other game, while much wealth is got in the bowels of the mountains, which contain mines of lead, copper, &c., with extensive quarries of slate—of the latter, the most considerable, perhaps, are wrought in Appin district, at Easdale; in Seil Island, and Balachelish, the Island of Islay, &c. In the beginning of the eighteenth century, much of the natural wood was cut up and sold by the proprietors, at prices by no means proportionate to the injury perpetrated upon the face of the country; despoiling it of one of its most interesting features, finding, in the introduction of modern plantations, but a meagre substitute for the noble forest tree. The county, altogether, abounds more in romantic scenes than fertile plains and wood-clad hills. The number of acres in tillage bear an insignificant proportion to those occupied by pasture, wood, hills, lakes and rivers. The CLIMATE of the lower parts of Argyleshire is mild and temperate, but in the upper inland districts, the atmosphere is severe. On the tops of many of the hills the snow often lies for months, chilling the air, and giving the country a cheerless wintry aspect, even in tolerably mild opening weather. In the sinuosites of the valleys the air is of a more bland nature, these places being protected from the north and north-west winds, and having generally a southerly exposure. The central districts are more subject to rains than the coast, from the proximity of high hills, whose summits attract and break the clouds from the Atlantic. The most considerable elevations in Argyleshire are, Beininturk, 2,170; Sliagaoil, 2,228; Beneaton, 2,306; Seur Choinick, 2,364; Beinima, 2,389; Creach Bein, 2,439; Paps of Jura, 2,476; Bennahna, 2,515; Buchael Etive, 2,537; Benreisipoll, 2,661; Benanambran, 2,720; Scur Dhonuil, 2,730; Bein-more, 2,980; Cruachlassa, 3,000; and Cruachan, 3,390 feet, respectively, above the sea.

The MANUFACTURES of Argyleshire are yet in so feeble a state as to be scarcely worthy of notice. The principal article made on a large scale for exportation is whisky, which is of a remarkably fine quality; there are distilleries in several parts of the county, for which Glasgow is the depôt. From the peculiar form and watery intersection of this county, the communication between its insular and mainland portions has been greatly facilitated by steam power navigation; and now a very considerable number of steam vessels are constantly employed in conveying passengers and goods to and fro throughout the county, and in transporting the country produce to Glasgow. There is not, at the present day, a bay, a loch, or inlet, but holds a daily or commands a weekly communication with the Lowlands, and the several districts of the country. By this means the farmers are encouraged to fatten stock which they would never otherwise think of rearing. Steam boats are, in short, the lively causes of every kind of improvement in this county, and in agriculture changes are yearly witnessed in the different districts, from the modern improvements in husbandry.

RIVERS and LAKES.—The county is well watered by rivers (not considerable), brooks and lochs, which abound with fish. Loch Fyne is celebrated as furnishing the best herrings of any found on the coast of Scotland, and it was estimated, that there were caught, in this arm of the sea, from twenty to thirty thousand barrels annually; but the 'take' has greatly fallen off in later years. Loch Aw (pronounced Loch O), is a beautiful fresh-water lake, about twenty-eight miles long and from one to two broad, reckoned the most picturesque lake of any in the Highlands, and possesses many lovely woody islets, among which are seen the ruins of several old castles; its waters, which abound with salmon, trout and eel, discharge themselves into Loch Etive, a branch of the Atlantic Ocean, at Bunaw Ferry.

ECCLESIASTICAL DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This extensive county is divided, ecclesiastically, into not more than fifty parishes, which contain only two Royal Burghs, INVERARY, at the head of Loch Fyne, and CAMPBELTOWN, in Kintyre, the former of which is a station of the circuit court of justiciary. One member is returned to parliament for the county; the contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented), are CAMPBELTOWN, INVERARAY, and OBAN. The Duke of Argyll is the proprietor of a large portion of the shire; and he is the chief of the family of Campbell, a surname which is found over the whole region, among high and low. The lordship of Campbell was elevated to the earldom of Argyll in 1457 by James III.; to a Marquisate in 1641 by Charles I.; and to a Dukedom in 1701 by William III.

TOTAL POPULATION OF ARGYLESHIRE.....	71859	85583	97316	101400	98377	89757

According to the returns, the decrease of the population is ascribed to the tide of emigration flowing from this, as well as some other Scottish counties

The total annual value of Real Property, in Argyleshire, as assessed in 1843, amounted to £261,919. 12*s.* 11*d.* and the amount assessed to the Property and Income Tax, in 1849, to £283,079.

APPIN AND BALACHELISH SOUTH,

WITH THE ISLAND OF LISMORE, PORT RAMSEY, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

APPIN, or as it is more generally called, PORT APPIN, is a small village, in the united parish of Lismore and Appin, and comprised in a district of the latter appellation; situated on the point of a small promontory, on the eastern shore of Loch Linnhe, 13 miles N. of Oban, 15 N.W. of Bonawe, 35 N.W. of Inverary, 136 N.W. of Edinburgh, and 29 S.S.W. of Fort William. The parish is of great extent, chiefly occupied as grazing farms; but the village contains very few houses, and is a mile and a half off the main road. Three miles to the north is Appin House, the seat of the late R. Downie, Esq. of Appin, whose mansion is surrounded by some of the finest timber on this coast—the Misses G. Downie are the present occupants. The church is parliamentary church nine miles distant, in the same nearly two miles north of the village, and there is a direction, on the way to Balachelish South. On a small island near PORTNACROSS, full two miles north, is the ancient and partly delapidated castle of Stalker; it is nearly square, of considerable height, and evidently has been a place of some strength; and though its area is not extensive, it occupies almost a moiety of the little islet on which it stands. About half a mile from Stalker Castle, on the ISLAND OF SHUNA, are the still more ruinous remains of another fortress of this description. A fair, formerly held at Port Appin on the Friday before Martinmas, now possesses but little attraction; there is another well-attended fair, however, for black cattle, held at SHIAN-FERRY nearly, three miles to the south, on the 15th May and the 12th November.

BALACHELISH SOUTH is a straggling but populous village on the south shore of Loch Leven, about three miles east of Balachelish Ferry (in the same parish), and 15½ N. of Port Appin. Near the village at the foot of the Glencoe hills, are the extensive slate quarries of the Messrs. Stuart (wrought by the executors of the late Charles Stuart, Esq. of Balachelish), who export annually from 12,000 to 15,000 tons of this article to all parts of Scotland and the north of England; it is a blue slate, and of a quality equal to any produced in Britain; there is a convenient quay for its shipment, and in connection with the works there are four hundred men employed; there is also an excellent granite quarry on the same property. Within a mile of the quarries westward is an Episcopalian chapel, and a small one for Roman Catholics, erected in 1836, stands at a short distance from the village. About a mile above the quarries, on the margin of Loch Leven, near the opening of a glen exceedingly wild and romantic, and almost embosomed by trees, is Invercoe House, and opposite, on the north shore of the loch (which is here fully a mile broad), in the county of Inverness, is Callart, the modern mansion of Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart. of Fassfern and Callart, contributing in an eminent degree to the beauty of the landscape. At BALACHELISH SOUTH FERRY is a comfortable inn and posting house, and in the immediate vicinity, at the entrance of a sequestered valley, is Balachelish House, formerly the residence of Charles Stuart, Esq.; westward, three miles from which is Ardsheal, the seat of Major Robert Stewart.

LISMORE is an island in Loch Linnhe, twelve miles in length by about two in breadth; it lies between Appin and Morven, and belongs to the same united parish with the former place. Great quantities of excellent lime, as well as oats and potatoes, are exported from hence. There is a small village on this isolated fertile spot, called PORT RAMSEY; and at the southern point on a ridge of rocks projecting some distance into the channel, stands a lighthouse, almost in a direct line between Oban and the sound of Mull; the light is on a high rounded pillar of stone masonry, and is an excellent and most useful beacon. On this island are also a church, the remains of Doune or Auchindoune castle, and the ruins of a Danish fort.

POST OFFICE, STRATH OF APPIN, Donald M'Leod, Post Master.—Letters (from BONAW and the SOUTH), arrive every afternoon at half-past three, and from FORT WILLIAM every evening at half-past nine, and are despatched to BONAW and the SOUTH every evening at half-past nine, and to FORT WILLIAM, every afternoon at half-past three.

POST OFFICE, BALACHELISH SOUTH, Colin M'Donald, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (by Mail Car) from BONAW, every evening at half-past six, and are despatched thereto every evening at half-past seven.

Money Orders are granted and paid at both offices.

CONVEYANCE BY WATER.

To and from GLASGOW, FORT WILLIAM and INVERNESS, Steam Boats call at Port Appin and at Corran Ferry—the latter about five miles from Balachelish, generally three times a week in summer, and twice a week in winter

BONAW AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BONAW, or BUNAWE, is a small scattered village, on the river Awe, 122 miles N.W. of Edinburgh, 80 N.W. of Glasgow, 12 E. of Oban, and 20 N. of Inveraray by Port Sonachan ferry—but round the head of Loch Awe, by Dalmally, avoiding the ferry, it is 32 miles. The Lorn Furnace Company have an establishment here, and another at MELFORT, near Easdale, for making pig-iron. The ore is of a peculiar kind, imported by the company from the district of Furness, in Lancashire, and is smelted entirely with charcoal, made in the neighbourhood, from the timber produced on a large tract of country, held by the company on a long lease: they are said to be the only furnaces in Scotland heated solely by charcoal, and the iron is considered equal to any smelted in the kingdom. The company employ about three hundred men in connexion with their works. Bonaw is also much celebrated for its salmon fishery, which affords employment to a considerable number of persons in the fishing season. Large quantities of the fish are sent fresh in boxes to Glasgow and other parts of Scotland—as well as pickled, sealed in jars, and kits or firkins, for the London market.

The church, which was erected in 1827-8, stands about half a mile above the iron furnace, near the road to Inverary, where also is the parish school: the funds for both these structures were supplied by the munificence of General D. Campbell, of Locknell Near the church is the Taynuilt Inn, a comfortable and convenient house between Inveraray and Oban; and at Ardchattan, about four miles north-west, on the opposite side of Loch Etive, stand the remains of an ancient priory of the Benedictines; the venerable mansion of S. Popham, Esq., of Ardchattan, is situated on a part of the site of the priory. A new church was erected at Ardchattan in 1836, at an expense to the heritors of about £1,000; it contains sittings for four hundred. The objects that most forcibly strike the attention here are Loch Etive and Ben Cruachan—the latter, with his broad shoulders, rearing his blunt-pointed summit nearly 3,400 feet above the salt water that laves his foot. It is about five miles from the Taynuilt Inn to the top of this stupendous eminence; and, although the journey is somewhat fatiguing, the view obtained from the summit will amply reward the tourist for the trouble of ascending to it.

POST OFFICE, BONAW, Donald M'Dougall, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, GLASGOW, and all parts of the SOUTH arrive every morning at a quarter-past eleven; from OBAN, every morning at two, and from FORT WILLIAM every morning at one; and are despatched to EDINBURGH, GLASGOW and the SOUTH every morning at a quarter-past two, and to OBAN every forenoon at a quarter-past ten.
Money Orders are granted and paid here.

CAMPBELTOWN,

WITH SALT-PANS, SADDEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CAMPBELTOWN is a royal burgh and sea port 144 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh, and 100 S.W. of Glasgow, by sea, but by land the distance to either city is greater by 36 miles; 76 S. S. W. of Inveraray, 37 S. of Tarbert, and 10 N. of Southend; beautifully seated on a fine bay or inlet of the sea. It is a place of great antiquity, having been a royal residence so early as the fifth century, at which period Fergus the first king of Scotland fixed his residence here, and it continued the seat of his successors till 843. It was then called Dalruadhain, and a place on the north side of the present town is still known by that name, now written Dalaruan; but the appellation formerly applied to the site of modern Campbeltown was Ceann-Loch (i. e. the 'head of the loch'), by which name the country people still designate the town in Gaelic; the present name was given to it in honour of the Duke of Argyle, when it was made a royal burgh, in 1701. The town is sheltered on the north and south sides by lofty mountains, and has one of the safest harbours in the Western Highlands, possessing a depth of from three to fifteen fathoms at low water. The haven is spacious, being nearly two miles in length by one in breadth, and protected at its mouth by the Isle of Devar, which is joined to the main land on the south side by a bar of sand, visible at low water, nearly half a mile long—the entrance to the bay being from the north. A new light-house was erected in 1855 on the Isle of Devar, which is far more efficient than the old one formerly on the shore. On opening into the bay, the stranger's attention is arrested by the grand though wild scenery, particularly on the south side; and the prospect immediately comprises the neat local capital, Campbeltown, situate at the head of Loch Kilkerran; the public buildings are seen towering above the dwelling houses—beyond which the eye is carried for some distance over a fine, fertile, yet mountainous country. From the shore two quays project into the bay, so as to allow vessels to load and unload at low water: the principal one, appropriated to the convenience of steam boats and heavy vessels, was much improved in 1836, and is almost on a line with the Main-street, the other stretches from Shore-street; and there is a third quay on the opposite side of the loch, adjoining that part of the town called Dalintober.

Campbeltown formerly derived great advantage from the herring fishery, for which it was particularly famed; but since the withdrawal of the bounty it has almost gone to decay, few vessels being now engaged in the trade. The staple at the present time is distilling whiskey, and in this branch nearly twenty firms are engaged producing an article inferior perhaps to none in the kingdom, chiefly for the Glasgow and English houses Next in consequence, and mainly, if not entirely dependent for its prosperity on the last named branch, is malting. Agriculture of late years has risen into great importance. Some of the finest and richest land in this part of Scotland lies to the north and west of the town, and is chiefly the property of the Duke of Argyll, and D. S. Galbraith and George Macneal, Esqrs. Two small woollen manufactories, a colliery, a tannery, rope walks, &c. add to the business importance of the place, whilst its neighbourhood abounds with lime, stone, &c. for building and other purposes. Few towns of the size of Campbeltown possess equal commercial advantages: there are a custom-house, an extensive excise establishment, and branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, the Clydesdale Bank, and the Royal Bank of Scotland. Steam vessels sail regularly to Glasgow, Greenock, and Ayr, and occasionlly to the adjacent coast towns, and to Londonderry, &c. in Ireland; and numerous coasting vessels are freighted to Liverpool, other more distant parts of the empire, as well as to North America, &c. The principal exports are whiskey, wool, herrings, live stock, salt, &c.; the imports are timber, grain, yest, groceries, ironmongery, &c. The municipal government of the town is vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and twelve councillors, and combined with Ayr, Inveraray, Irvine and Oban, returns one member to the Imperial parliament— the gentleman at present sitting is Edward Henry John Crawford, Esq. The town is gas-lighted, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water, by pipes conducted from Crosshill, into the principal streets. The town hall, a convenient building, ornamented with a handsome spire, contains a council chamber, and an assembly and other rooms. The three Banks, are thus situated, one in Main-street, and two in Longrow, besides a Bank for Savings in Back-street—which was established in 1827, under the provisions of the Act 59 George 3, cap 62.

Places of worship, Schools, &c.—The Castle Hill church, so called from its occupying the site of the ancient royal castle, was erected in 1781. The Gaelic church, so named from the language in which the service is performed, was built in 1807, and a beautiful stone spire added in 1836. The United Presbyterian church was erected in 1767, and is ornamented with a handsome and substantial stone tower, in the Gothic style, raised in 1834. The Independent church was built in the latter year. The Episcopal church opened also in 1834, was at first occupied as a Secession church, but afterwards as a branch of the Scotch Episcopal church. The Roman Catholic Chapel opened in 1849 is a neat structure, with carved stone front and pinnacles, which gives to it a rather imposing appearance. The burgh and parochial school is an extensive and very useful institution, supported by the corporation and the heritors in the parish; the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge have a school in the town, and another about five miles north; there are two schools of industry for girls; and the Dalintober boys and girls schools, endowed by a Miss Lucy Campbell, in 1843.

The most remarkable piece of antiquity is an ancient cross, erected in the middle of the main street. The inscription is in the Saxon character, and the following is a literal copy, with the translation annexed.

> Hæc: est: crux: Domini: YVARI: M: H: EACHYRNA. quondam: Rectoris: de KYREGAN: et: Domini: ANDRE: nati: ejus: Rectoris de KIL: COMAN: qui hanc crucem fieri faciebat: 'This is the cross of Mr. Edward M. H. Eachran, once Rector of Cyregan, and Master Andrew his son Rector of Kilcoman, who erected this cross'

There is, however, no date, but it is said to have been executed about the twelfth century, and to have been brought from the Isle of Iona. South of the town is the high mountain called Bengoelion, from which there is an extensive view of the neighbouring country, including the distant objects of Arran and Pladda islands, Cowall hills, the bay and heads of Ayr, the Lowlands as far as Loch Ryan, the Craig of Ailsa, Black Head at the entrance of Belfast Lough, Dounavertie, Sanda Isles, part of the Irish coast near the points of Garronhead, Red Bay and Fair Head, the dangerous bay of Macrahanish, the Mull of Islay, and the Paps of Jura; also the cemetery at Kilkerran, with the points of Saddel Carrdell and Skipness. As the north and south shores of Campbeltown are both pleasant and healthy, they are the residence of many respectable families; and in the neighbourhood the seats of G. Macneal, J. L. Stewart, and Edward Langlands, Esqrs., and Capt. George Melville, deserve particular notice.

The market is held on Thursday, and the fairs on the first Thursday and the last Wednesday in February; the second and last Wednesday in May; the Wednesday before the second Thursday in August, and on the second Thursday in the same month; the Friday before Kilmichael market, in October, and the third Thursday in November.

Salt-Pans, so called from salt having been made here from sea water, is a small village, five miles west of Campbeltown, on the southern shore of Macrahanish bay, the dashing of whose waves can be heard to a great distance; and the continual heavy swell here, caused by the Atlantic rolling in between Islay and the northern coast of Ireland, is justly dreaded by the mariner. In the village is an excellent parochial school. Nearly half a mile south is 'Lossit House,' the tasteful and modern mansion of George Macneal, Esq. of Ugadale; and a mile on the way to Campbeltown, at Drumleman, is the Campbeltown colliery, the only work of the kind in the county: the coal lies in a bed of considerable thickness, is rather inferior in quality, and is conveyed in waggons to the town.

Saddel and Skipness form a united parish, situate at the inner extremity of the peninsular of Kintyre—the village of Saddel being about ten miles north of Campbeltown. It contains the ancient castle of Somerled, the great chieftain and founder of the clan Macdonald; and the ruins of a monastery, of the Cistercian order, founded by Somerled in 1160. Saddel is now the family residence of D. S. Galbraith, Esq. whose mansion stands in a good situation, in the centre of this fine glen. The ancient castle, which is still entire, and the ruins of the monastery, in which is the cemetery of the ancient Macdonald family, are well worthy of being visited by the curious.

POST OFFICE, Back-street, Campbeltown, Allan Watson, Post Master.—Letters from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and places North and South, also from England, arrive every evening at six, and from Greenock by steam-boat three times a week in winter, and every day in summer, time uncertain, and are despatched to Edinburgh and Glasgow every evening at twelve, and to Greenock by the boat at eight in the morning.

CLACHAN, TAYENLOAN, KILLEAN, GLENBARR,

AND BALLACHANTUIE, WITH THE ISLANDS OF GIGHA, CARA, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

CLACHAN is a village in the parish of Kilcalmonell, situated in a fine valley on the banks of a small stream, over which is a good stone bridge, and on the road from Tarbert to Campbeltown, 11 miles S. of the former, and 26 N. of the latter place. In the village is the parish church, a chapel for Independents, and the parochial school; and a little to the east is the neat residence of Alexander Morrison, Esq. of Balinakill, who is the proprietor of the village. The Ronachan Inn, recently erected in the village, affords good accommodation to the pedestrian or traveller. In the vicinity, to the north-west, is a vitrified fort on a large scale, and another contiguous fortification in ruins; and among the hills to the east are several beautiful fresh water lochs, well stored with trout. Seven miles south, on the same road, and near the coast, is

TAYENLOAN, a small village in the parish of Killean: about half a mile in a northern direction is the mansion of the late Sir Charles M. Lockhart, Bart.; and opposite the village, but separated from the main land by a sound about four miles broad, is the island of GIGHA, which is nearly six miles long, and from two to three broad; it is the property of the Honourable A. H. M'Donald Morton.

CARA, a neighbouring island, which is about one mile in length, is the property of the Honourable A. H. M'Donald Morton, who acquired both it and Gigha by marriage with one of the Misses Lockhart.

KILLEAN is about four miles south of Tayenloan. Near the road stands the parish church, a small neat stone building, erected in 1787, and the parochial school. Seals are very frequently seen lying on rocks near this coast. Nearly three miles south from Killean, and twelve north of Campbeltown, is the village of GLENBARR, situated on the banks of the Barr water, which is well stocked with fine salmon and trout, and nearly a mile from the shore, in a rich and well cultivated glen, is Barr House, the property of Keith Macalister, Esq., a fine structure, built in the Gothic style, and from its site an extensive view of the sea and the north-east coast of Ireland may be obtained. Three miles S. of Glenbarr, and nine and a half N.W. of Campbeltown, on the main road near the shore, is BALLACHANTUIE, a small village in the united parish of Killean and Kilchenzie, containing a small church, erected in 1825. The road between this village and Campbeltown has been much improved of late years, and a new line, several miles in length, has been cut along the shore, at a great expense, to avoid the hills on the old road. The chief employment of the people on this coast is fishing and agriculture.

DUNOON,

KIRN, INNELLAN, GLENLEAN, SANDBANK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNOON and KILMUN is a parish, lying on the western shore of the frith of Clyde—the town of Dunoon, a thriving little one, is the principal place in the district of Cowal; 27 miles S.S.E. of Inverary, 21 S.S.W. of Strachur, and 7 S. of Kilmun: by sea it is 74 miles W. of Edinburgh, 30 W. of Glasgow, 10 N. of Rothesay, 8 W. of Greenock, and 4 W. of Gourock. Its prosperity may be mainly ascribed to the pleasant site it occupies, having in front the famed frith of Clyde, always studded with numerous sailing and steam vessels. The town extends over considerable space along the shore; for a distance of two miles in both directions, there are several ranges of genteel looking and well furnished houses, for the accommodation of families who resort hither in the summer season for sea bathing. (Any information connected with those to let may be obtained of the post-master and booksellers.) Intermixed with the lodging houses are many tasteful villas, chiefly occupied by the merchants and professionals of Glasgow, &c. for country retirement. It is only since the year 1821 that Dunoon has become a place of resort for sea bathing; at that time there were only three slated houses in the place, and the population did not number above one hundred. In 1835 a wooden pier was constructed, three hundred feet long and twelve broad, with a projection, nearly at right angles with the end, ninety feet long and twenty broad: this substantial and convenient work cost £1,500. About a mile distant, at KIRN, is another pier, similarly constructed; and two miles north-east is Hunter's quay, a good stone building, with a projection and slip, erected in 1828. Nearly a mile further, at the entrance of Holy Loch, on its southern shore, is 'Hafton House', an elegant mansion, this seat occupies a pleasant and picturesque situation, amidst thriving plantation and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds. In Holy Loch fifteen hundred vessels may ride in perfect safety, however boisterous the weather.

The parish church was built in 1816, and considerably enlarged in 1835, containing at present nearly nine hundred sittings; it is a Gothic edifice, with a square tower, and stands on an eminence in a conspicuous situation. A chapel of ease to Dunoon was erected near Toward lighthouse, seven miles south-west, in 1836-7, by subscription; it is a neat Gothic structure, containing two hundred sittings, and cost £400. In 1828 a United Presbyterian church was erected in Argyle-street, with three hundred sittings—which being found insufficient, a gallery was subsequently added. A Free church, a Scotch Episcopal church, and an English Episcopal Church—all neat buildings, are the other places of worship in the town and immediate neighbourhood—in which are also several public schools, and an excellent private one for boarding young ladies, conducted by the Misses Simpson. Two churches one for the Establisment, the other for the United Presbyterians have been erected at KIRN. Fairs are held at Dunoon on the second Wednesday in January, February, August, and October (O.S.), and on the last Tuesday in November.

INNELLAN, is a thriving and respectable village, four miles west of Dunoon on the shore of the Frith of Clyde. The houses are mostly of a first class order, the grounds adjoining being tastefully laid out, give them a neat appearance; many being the summer residences of the Glasgow merchants. There are two churches, and a good school. The Royal Hotel which deserves particular notice, is built on an elevated site, its dimensions are large and imposing; it stand second to none in this part of the country for its excellent accomodation; in front is the pier at which steamers to and from Glasgow call several times a day.

GLENLEAN or CLACHAIG is a village in the parish of Dunoon from six to seven miles north west therefrom. The manufacture of gunpowder by Messrs. Curtis's and Harvey, is carried on here on an extensive scale, and give employment to many hands. There is also a good school in the village, a post-office, and a comfortable public house the Clachaig Inn, kept by Mr. Thomas Harkness, who is also the proprietor.

SANDBANK is a small but thriving village, 3 miles north-west of Dunoon, on the road to Kilmun. There is a good school in the village, several respectable shopkeepers and traders, two or three good Inns, but that which deserves more particular notice is the Pier Hotel, a fine building erected by Mr. Jamieson, who is also the occupier. This hotel being close to the pier at which steamers call several times a day, affords great accommodation to parties travelling in this direction.

POST OFFICE, Argyle-street, DUNOON, James M'Nair, Post Master.—Letters arrive from EDINBURG, GLASGOW, GREENOCK, and all parts every morning at half-past nine, and afternoon at five, and are despatched every morning at seven, and afternoon at three.

Money Orders are granted and paid here.

EASDALE AND ITS VICINITY.

EASDALE is a village, partly situated on the island of its name, and partly on the island of Seal, from which it is separated by a narrow sound; it is 16 miles s. w. by s. of Oban, 30 N.N.W. of Lochgilphead, 40 w. of Inveraray, and 142 w. of Edinburgh. It is chiefly remarkable for its slate quarries, which are said to have been open above three centuries; they are the property of the Marquess of Breadalbane, and are wrought by the Nether Lorn Slate Company, who, altogether employ about two hundred men, and produce about 12,000 tons of slate annually, of a superior quality, which is exported to all parts of Scotland and the north of England. Several of the quarries, which are now above one hundred and fifty feet below the sea, are kept dry by pumping with steam engines. The geological formation of the slate-rock here is similar, as to stratification and cleavage, to the Welsh rock; and the island of Easdale, which is nearly a mile in circumference, is entirely formed of this rock, except a few trap dykes which here and there intersect it. There is a good quay for shipping the slate, and safe anchorage in the sound, through which the Glasgow steam boats pass almost daily to and from the north. Ardmaddy Castle, an ancient seat of the Breadalbane family, about two miles east of Easdale, is situated in a fine pleasant bay: the grounds are well wooded, and contain several pretty cascades. A marble quarry was wrought near the castle about ninety years ago; lead mines have been worked in the island of Luing, and there are several caves in Kilbride well worth visiting.

INVERARAY AND ITS VICINITY.

INVERARAY is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the county town of Argyleshire, 102 miles w. by N. of Edinburgh, 60 N.W. of Glasgow, 32 S.E. of Oban, by Port Sonachan Ferry, and 42 by Dalmally, avoiding the ferry, 20 S. E. of Bonaw, by the before-mentioned ferry, but 32 by the coach road and Dalmally, 24 N.E. of Lochgilphead, and 76 N.N.E. of Campbeltown. It is delightfully situated on the north-western shore of Loch Fyne, on a point of land (Ardreanich or the Fern Point) forming the southern side of a fine bay, which receives the waters of the Aray and the Shirra; over the first is an elegant stone bridge of two arches, and is within half a mile of the town, the second is about 1½ mile E. and is crossed by a bridge of one arch. From the former of these streams the town derives its name 'Inver,' signifying the mouth—from its proximity to the mouth of the 'Aray.' A short distance from the town, at the extremity of the bay, stands Inveraray castle, the princely residence of the Duke of Argyll. The architecture of this mansion is highly finished gothic, with turrets at the angles, and its site particularly beautiful and commanding. From its southern front there is an expansive view for several miles down Loch Fyne, and of the adjacent lofty mountains, which are adorned with fine plantations to their summits. A square pavilion rising high above its turrets, supplies light to a gallery (which leads to all the upper chambers) and a spacious hall, furnished with an elegant organ, and decorated with the arms used by the Argyleshire militia, in 1745. Amongst the paintings, are those of the Earl who was executed in the reign of Charles II., and also the Marquess who suffered in that of James the VII. The drawing room and some other apartments, are lined with rich and costly tapestry of rare designs—indeed, the whole interior is fitted and furnished in sumptuous style. The castle also contains two beautiful pedestals of red granite, or porphyry, of a very rare kind, discovered about fifteen years since by the present Duke, near the Ross of Mull: two slabs were sent to Aberdeen and converted into pedestals, in forming which, it was found to be much superior, and to take a higher polish than either the Peterhead or Aberdeen granite. The Duke of Sutherland subsequently procured a considerable quantity for the internal improvements of Dunrobin castle. On entering the bay, the castle has a very majestic appearance, and the woods, that, rising for a considerable distance, adorn the domain, give the town an appearance of grandeur. Every stranger is struck with the neatness of the town, which, though small, is well built, and some of the houses approach to elegance. The park and grounds of the castle present a drive, almost in a direct line, of about ten miles, with several others of great extent, all thrown open to the public. Upon the lawn is a brass gun that belonged to the admiral's ship Florida, one of the 'Invincible armada,' blown up in Tobermory bay in 1588, where she was forced to put in through stress of weather. The gun, which was taken from the bay is about ten feet in length, and is fired upon certain occasions.

The chief business of this place is the herring fishery, a great proportion of the produce of which is sent to the Glasgow market. Loch Fyne terminates about nine miles above the town, and from the fineness of its scenery, and the richness of its herrings, is justly remarkable. The value of herrings taken out of the loch in a single season, until within the last twelve years, frequently amounted to £30,000, but of late years, not more than one-fourth of that amount has been realized. In prosperous seasons, there are at times, from three hundred to four hundred boats employed at once on its waters: the loch is fifty miles long, and is about ten broad below Loch Gilp, seldom exceeding three above OTTERFERRY. From a convenient part of the town, and projecting from the shore, is a well-built quay. In the town are two branch banks — one of the National Bank of Scotland, the other of the Union Bank of Scotland, and two good inns, and at DALMALLY is an excellent hotel and posting house—gentlemen frequenting which latter, have the privilege of fishing in the river Orcley and Loch-Awe, both celebrated for their salmon and trout. There is a daily communication with Glasgow throughout the year, by means of a steamer across Loch Fyne to Saint Catherine's, and also by the Castle Company's steam boats, which sail during the summer, and twice a week in the winter.

Inveraray was erected into a burgh by charter, granted by Charles I, in 1648, and its government vested in a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, with eleven councillors, a town clerk, and a treasurer. The burgh unites with CAMPBELTOWN and OBAN in this county, and with AYR and IRVINE, in Ayrshire, in sending one member to Parliament. (See Campbeltown.) The court house and gaol forming a substantial building of stone, is situate on the shore, and has an imposing appearance when seen from the loch. In it a sheriff's court is held every Monday and Thursday, from the 15th May to the end of July, and from the 15th October to the 4th April; a justice of peace small debt court sits every Wednesday, and a borough court daily, during the above periods.

The places of worship are, a neat church of stone, (surmounted by a spire), situated in the main street, and in which service is performed both in Gælic and English; a seccession church erected in 1836, on land given by D. Paterson, Esq.; and a neat free church, built in 1844, at the south end of the town. A parochial burgh or grammar school, a female charity school, and a school of industry are supported by the munificence of the Duke and Duchess of Argyle. About a mile and a half north-east of Inveraray is Glen-Shirra, in length about six miles; the scenery through which, is exceedingly beautiful—presenting gently-sloping hills, whose sides are clothed with wood, and rich meadow land, intersected with winding stream and lake, the whole furnishing a landscape of no ordinary beauty. About eight miles south of Inveraray, on the western bank of Loch Fyne, are the extensive granite quarries of Furnace, leased and wrought by Mr. William Sim. These quarries, which employ generally one hundred and fifty men, furnish nearly the whole of the stone for paving the streets of Glasgow. At GOULFIELD, in the vicinity of Furnace, an establishment for the manufacture of gunpowder has been in successful operation for some years. Fairs are held at Inveraray on the last Friday in May, and the last Thursday in October, and a great wool market on the third Thursday in July.

ISLAND OF ISLAY,

INCLUDING BOWMORE, BRIDGE-END, PORT ASKAIG, PORT CHARLOTTE, PORT ELLEN, ARDBEG, PORTNAHAVEN, AND THEIR VICINITIES.

ISLAY is a large island, and the most southerly of those called the Hebrides. In length from north to south it is about thirty miles, and its extreme land-breadth about eighteen. Askaig, the most northern port on the island, is distant from Edinburgh (by way of Tarbert), 179 miles, from Inveraray 76, and from Tarbert 40. It lies in a westerly direction from the peninsula of Kyntire, distant from it about twelve miles, and is separated, on the north, from the island of Jura by a narrow channel. It comprises three parochial divisions, namely, Bowmore (or Killarrow), Kilchoman and Kildalton. The mountains to the east of the island rise to an altitude of fifteen hundred feet, and are the resort of eagles, falcons, and other birds. The shore is very rugged, but the face of the country is finely varied by hill and dale. Many parts are well planted, and the island contains several beautiful lakes, well stocked with most delicious trout, together with the rivers Sorn and Laggan. The former empties itself into Loch Indaal, and the latter into Laggan Bay. The Laggan water is not surpassed in the West Highlands as a salmon stream. The land is tolerably cultivated, but it is still susceptible of great improvement. Upwards of three thousand head of black cattle, and several hundred horses, peculiarly adapted for small carriages, are annually exported, besides sheep. An immense quantity of whiskey, the produce of the distilleries in the island, is also exported to Glasgow, England and America. Lead and iron are said to abound in this island, and a company was at one time formed, called the Islay Mining Company, for extracting some of those minerals; the undertaking, however, proved abortive, and the company was dissolved. The proprietary of the island is with James Morrison, Esq. of London; William M'Ewen, Esq. owner of the Sunderland estate; and Colin Campbell, Esq. of that of Balinbay. There are many ruinous remains of ancient castles, churches, &c. scattered over the island; but perhaps the most remarkable natural curiosity in this part of the empire is Sloc-Mhaol-Doraidh, a large basin formed in the rock by the action of the sea, on the south-west point of Laggan Bay, about nine miles from Bowmore, into which the turbulent waters of the western ocean rush, by two channels in the rock, covered with natural arches: the grandeur of the scene presented during the flowing of the tide is inconceivable; this cave is scarcely inferior to the famed one of Fingal, in Staffa, and can only be entered by a boat in fine weather. At the entrance stands a perpendicular rock fifty feet high, with a belt round it, and is designated 'the soldier,' from appearing to guard the approach to it. The interior is dome-roofed and spacious, with a beautiful lake of fresh water, 'icy cold and crystal clear.' There are several other interesting natural perforations in different parts of the island, in some of which, as in Sanaig, is found an excellent quality of guano. The scenery in this locality, as well as several other points of the island, is highly interesting, and occasionally approaches the sublime. It was on this coast, in the vicinity of the last-named cave, that, on the 27th of April, 1847, the Exmouth was wrecked, when two hundred and forty-eight of the crew and passengers perished.

BOWMORE, the principal place on the island, is situated on the east side of Loch Indaal, three miles south of Islay House. The town, which consists of two principal streets, and several smaller ones diverging, possesses a good quay and a comfortable inn. It is a place of some business, several trading vessels belonging to it. The public structures are, the parish church—a circular edifice, with a peculiarly formed spire, and a building originally intended for a gaol, but now appropriated to the more beneficial uses of a public library, containing seventeen hundred volumes. An assembly-room is on the same floor as the library. There is also a large and excellent parochial school, with a house for the master, built and liberally endowed by Campbell of Islay.

At BRIDGE-END, three miles north of Bowmore, and eight miles south of Port Askaig, is a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, which greatly facilitates the commercial transactions of the island. At the inn here a court is held monthly for the recovery of small debts, and sessions for the trial of petty offences. A short distance to the west stands 'Islay House,' the mansion of Claud M'Kie, Esq., of Islay, surrounded with fine gardens and well planted grounds: it is situated at the head of Loch Indaal, of which it commands a fine view, as well as of the adjacent country.

PORT ASKAIG is a small creek or harbour, on the north side of the island, opposite Jura, from which it is separated by the sound of Islay, about a mile broad; the port is eleven miles north of Bowmore, and has the only quay on the island where vessels of considerable burden can load and unload at low water. It is the nearest port on the island to Glasgow, and there is a regular steamer weekly between that city and Askaig.

About four miles from Bridge-End, on the road to Port Askaig, is the village of BALLEGRANT, where there is a lead mine, worked for the last three years by Mr. John Alderson; the lead is of first-rate quality, and contains a small quantity of silver.

PORT CHARLOTTE is a small village, in the parish of Kilchoman, on the west side of Loch Indaal, nearly opposite to Bowmore; it is 16 miles s.w. of Port Askaig, and contains a good inn, a distillery, and an Independent chapel.

PORT ELLEN is a seaport and village, in the parish of Kildalton, on the east side of the island; 11 miles s.e. of Bowmore, and 22 s. of Port Askaig. In 1824 there stood only one house here, though in 1836 there were above one hundred and fifty; and the population and habitations have greatly increased since. The bay is considered safe, and is nearly a mile wide; the quay is commodious, and is formed on a rocky promontory near the middle of the harbour; the quay was erected in 1826, and enlarged and improved in 1832, by Campbell of Islay, who also erected a lighthouse. A branch of the City of Glasgow Bank is established here. The village is substantially built, and contains two inns. The inhabitants are principally employed in agriculture and fishing; and the prosperity of the village may be said to have been increasing for several years. At ARDBEG, about four miles distant, is the extensive distillery worked by Messrs. Alexander Macdougall & Co., producing, it is said by competent judges in these matters, the best whiskey in the island; and large quantities are exported to England and America, by this house and some others in the neighbourhood; in the same locality, but two miles nearer Port Ellen, is LAPHROAIG DISTILLERY, worked by Mr. Johnston; it is equally noted with the above for the manufacturing of whiskey of first-rate quality.

PORTNAHAVEN is a small village and seaport, 24 miles s.w. of Port Askaig, and 16 s.w. of Bridge-End. It is at the southern extremity of the island, having a quay formed by the rocks on the shore; and near the port is an elegant lighthouse, erected in 1824-5. Here is also a parliamentary church, and a parochial school. A considerable business is done in the season of fishing—the shores on this part of the island abounding with the finny treasures.

The fairs held in the island of Islay are as follow:—at BOWMORE, February 15th, the first Thursday after the 12th of August, November 12th for horses, and the Tuesday next before the 12th of November for cattle; at BRIDGE-END, for cattle, on the last Tuesday in each month from April to October, except May, when it is held on the second Wednesday of that month, and on the Wednesday next before the last Wednesday in May, for horses and black cattle—this fair generally continues three days.

THE ISLE OF JURA,

WITH THOSE OF BELNAHUA AND PLEDDA, COLONSAY, GARVELLOCH, LUNGA, ORANSAY, AND SCARBA, WITH MILLTOWN VILLAGE.

JURA, an island of the Hebrides, is thirty-three miles long, and from two to ten miles broad, separated from Knapdale, on the western coast of Scotland by the sound of Jura (ten miles broad), and from the island of Islay, to the south, by the sound of Islay (about a mile broad), and, with the other islands, forms the united parish of Jura and Colonsay. Jura belongs to Richard Denison Campbell, Esq., whose residence is at Ardfin, a respectable mansion on the south shore of the island. The most remarkable object in the isle is the Paps of Jura, an eminence nearly 2,500 feet above the level of the sea; they are three in number, standing on the same ridge, but having two valleys separating them, the tops are round, and consist, for some distance down the sides, of loose stones, rendering the ascent difficult, the top of the highest, called Beinnan-Oir, is about six miles from the village of Milltown. The island also contains several caves, one of them is so large, that it is said, a regiment of soldiers might perform their exercise in its spacious arena. To the north of the island, in a strait, nearly a mile broad, separating the island of Scarba from Jura, is the gulph of Correy Vrecken, where the rush of waters is so great, during the ebbing of the tide, as to form a terrible whirlpool, the noise of which can be heard for many miles. The red deer abound in the uplands of this island.

BELNAHUA and PLADDA, two small islands to the north of Scarba, contain several quarries of excellent blue slate, the property of Mr. John Stevenson; they are at present wrought by Mr. Campbell Paterson, the number of men generally employed is about sixty.

COLONSAY, a rather high rocky island, to the west of Jura, twelve miles long, and about three broad, is the property of Duncan M'Neill, Esq. of Colonsay, who has a good mansion house on the island at Killoran. The ruinous sacred buildings, and the numerous inscriptions on the grave-stones covering the ashes of the illustrious dead, are considered by many almost equal to those found on the island of Iona.

GARVELLOCH, or Holy Island, contains an extensive old fort, called Dunconnel, once a stronghold belonging to the Lords of the Isles, and in one of them called the Nun's Island, are considerable remains of an old nunnery, said to have been founded by St. Columbus.

ORANSAY, a small island to the south of Colonsay, contains the residence of the late Captain Alexander M'Neill, who was one of the many that perished in the melancholy shipwreck of the Orion steamer, off Portpatrick, in 1850.

MILLTOWN, frequently called Craighouse, the principal village in Jura, is eight miles from Port Askaig ferry. It has a good quay, and the harbour, which is large, and formed by several small islands, has obtained the appellation of Small Isles Harbour. About half a mile north of the village, is the parish church and a parochial school. The Rev. Lachlan M'Kenzie is the respected minister of the united parish of Jura and Colonsay. The village contains a distillery, a comfortable inn and a corn mill.

POST OFFICE, LAGG, Duncan Shaw, Post Master. — Letters arrive (from LOCHGILPHEAD) every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and from PORT ASKAIG, every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and are despatched thereto same days as the arrivals.

KILMUN,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF STRONE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILMUN, formerly the capital of a parish of the same name, now incorporated with that of Dunoon, is a pleasant, thriving village, and of late years has acquired no little notice as a place resorted to for sea-bathing: it is situated on the north shore of Holy Loch, 22 miles S.E. of Inveraray, 16 S.E. of Strachur, 7 N. of Dunoon, 30 W. of Glasgow, and 8 W. of Greenock. This place may be almost said to owe its origin to the present proprietor, David Napier, Esq. of Glenshellish, for, previously to attracting his notice, there were very few houses here, whereas it is now a respectable village, having many handsome dwellings, occupied as summer residences by opulent merchants and professionals of Glasgow. There are likewise several pleasant and well-furnished lodging houses. Holy Loch is full three miles long: at its entrance it is scarcely a mile wide, but within, it expands to a fine sheet of water, extending a mile and a half in width; at its head it receives the lesser ane greater Echaig—the latter river flows from Loch Eck, a beautiful fresh water lake, seven miles long and one broad, whose steep rugged shores, rising to a considerable height, form a striking contrast, on a fine day, to its wide placid waters. Both the loch and the two rivers before mentioned afford plenty of sport to the angler, and and the ride through this valley to Strachur, or Loch Fyne, is seldom exceeded for wild and sublime scenery The quay, which was constructed by Mr. Napier (before mentioned), in 1829, will admit the steam-boats alongside at all times of the tide. The quarantine station for the Clyde was formerly opposite this village. Of the ancient history of Kilmun little is known, but its old church; the mausoleum of the ducal family of Argyll, and especially the tower of the original church, evidence it to have been, in former times, a place of some note.

STRONE a scattered village, which nearly joins Kilmun has greatly improved in the last few years, a many respectable lodging houses have been built, besides the erection of two churches.

LOCHGILPHEAD, ARDRISHAIG, BELLANACH,

KILMARTIN, KILMICHAEL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

LOCHGILPHEAD is a thriving burgh (having been so constituted under the Act 13 and 14 Victoria, cap. 33.) pleasantly situated at the northern extremity or head of Loch Gilp, from which the name is derived. It is 125 miles W. of Edinburgh, 53 N. of Campbeltown, 24 S.W. of Inveraray, and 15 N. of Tarbert. The burgh is of comparatively modern erection, its site containing only two or three fishermen's huts at the commencement of the present century: it now consists of several well formed streets, the footpaths of which are well flagged — better indeed than the majority of towns in the county; and the inhabitants are plenteously supplied with water, conveyed by pipes into each of the principal streets, from two fountains on the north side of the town. Meetings of the turnpike road trustees, prison and constabulary boards, are held here on the Wednesday after the first Tuesday in every month, and a sheriff's court, for the recovery of small debts, is held every three months. Lochgilphead is rapidly improving, in front of the main street a part of the loch has been walled off, and a new piece of ground made, for the convenience of the large cattle fairs or markets. A new level road is formed to Lochgear (a distance of eight miles), which avoids the hills that formerly obstructed the road from Lochgilphead to Inveraray. The principal employment of the inhabitants is agriculture and fishing, whilst others are occupied in the distilleries, of which there are two respectable establishments in the neighbourhood, namely, the Argyleshire distillery, of considerable repute in its produce and the Glengilp. Behind the town runs a small stream, which supplies a dyehouse, and gives motion to two or three mills. On the Kilmory side of the town is a quay, for the accommodation of the small craft engaged in the herring fishery.

A parliamentary church was erected at the head of Argyle-street, in 1827-8, and in 1834 galleries were added; an Independent chapel is in the same street; a Secession meeting house near Colchester-square, and there was erected in 1852, on the north side of the town, a handsome Scotch Episcopal cathedral church, together with a residence for the Bishop of Argyle and the Isles: the site commands an extensive view of Loch Fyne, and the varied and beautiful scenery around. Within half a mile to the west stands Oakfield, the residence of Alexander Campbell, Esq., and a mile to the south-east is Kilmory House, the seat of Sir John Poulett Orde, Bart.; the house, surrounded with its well wooded grounds, forms a conspicuous and interesting feature in the landscape from all parts of the loch, especially from Ardrishaig, which is directly opposite. Ten miles north-west is Duntroon Castle, the property of John Malcolm, Esq. of Poltalloch, who posseses extensive demesnes in this part of the county, and who has, during the last forty years, converted above two thousand acres of soft peat moss on his estate, at the head of Loch Crinan, about two miles from the castle, into excellent corn and grazing land. The farm is appropriately called 'Experiment.' An elegant mansion has recently been erected in this locality by the proprietor of the estate. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in March, for horses; on the second Wednesday and Thursday after the 26th of May, for black cattle and hiring servants; on the last Thursday in September, and the second Wednesday and Thursday in November, for black cattle; and on the second Thursday after the last Thursday in November, for horses and hiring servants. A prize show of cattle, horses, sheep, &c. takes place about the latter end of September.

ARDRISHAIG, two miles south, contains about five hundred inhabitants, who are chiefly engaged in fishing and providing accommodation for the numerous steam packet passengers calling here, for whom excellent arrangements are made—almost every house being provided with one or more beds for their reception; and several of the lodging houses are of a respectable grade. This place may be said to be the port to Lochgilphead. In addition to a protective pier of four hundred yards in length, with a small lighthouse at its extremity, a commodious pier and slip within the harbour which has a depth of seven feet at low water, was erected in 1837, by the government commissioners of the Crinan canal, which commences here, and extends to Loch Crinan, a distance of nine miles — obviating a boisterous voyage of forty leagues round the Mull of Kintyre. Steam packets pass the canal on their way from Glasgow to all parts of the western coast, and by the Caledonian canal to Inverness. An accident of an alarming character occurred in 1859—the banks of the canal for a considerable distance being washed away.

BELLANACH is a small village, about 6 miles W. of Lochgilphead, situated in a glen on the southern bank of the Crinan canal, which here forms a fine triangular sheet of water, and terminates at Crinan, about a mile further west. The village contains a sub-post office, and a parochial school.

KILMARTIN, a small village, nearly nine miles north of Lochgilphead, contains a comfortable inn, a parochial school, and a parish church—the latter completed in 1836. About two miles to the east is the new mansion house of Calton Moor, the residence of John Malcolm, Esq., of Poltalloch, about a quarter of a mile more distant, standing on a prominent rock facing Loch Crinan is Duntroon Castle, and about two miles up the valley is Kilmartin House, a commodious mansion, also the property of the above named gentleman, and within two miles from the last named are the beautiful ruins of Carnazarie Castle, formerly the residence of the Bishops of Argyll. Eleven miles west of Kilmartin, by a circuitous road, is Craignish Castle, the residence of — Gascogyne, Esq. of Jura. At CRAIGNISH is also the elegant mansion and demesne of Capt. John Campbell. Fairs, the first Thursday in March, for horses, and the fourth Thursday in November, for horses and hiring servants.

KILMICHAEL (or Glassary, as it was formerly called) is a parish situated betwixt the sound of Jura and Loch Fyne, 4 miles N.W. of Kilmartin. The farm of Balliemore, in this parish, is worthy of mention, as having been changed into a fine corn land from a wilderness, within the last twenty years. Between Kilmichael and Kilmartin there are numerous druidical remains. Two large and much frequented fairs are held here annually, at which from seven to eight thousand head of black cattle are generally exposed for sale — namely, on the last Wednesday in May, which is also for horses and sheep, and the last Tuesday before the last Wednesday in October, at both of which fairs the hiring of servants takes place.

OBAN AND ITS VICINITY.

OBAN is a modern neat town and sea-port, in the parish of Kilbride, 136 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 92 from Glasgow, 40 S.S.W. of Fort William, 32 W.N.W. of Inverary, over Port Sonachan ferry (but 42 by coach road and Dalmally), and 30 S.E. of Tobermory. To Vint, Staffa, and Iona hence, going round the island of Mull, the voyage is about 120 miles, and it is about the same distance to Portree, in Skye. The town enjoys a beautiful situation on the west coast of Mid Lorn district, and at the head of a fine bay, formed by the island of Kerrara in front, having an entrance at each end. The bay is from twelve to twenty fathoms deep, is well sheltered by lofty mountains, and large enough to anchor with convenience a large number of merchantmen. There are two commodious quays, that on the north was considerably enlarged and improved in 1836. The imports of Oban consist chiefly of merchandise from Glasgow, Liverpool and Ireland, and its principal exports are whiskey and wool. The municipal government of the town is vested in two baillies and four councillors; and Oban is contributary with the burghs of Ayr, Campbeltown, Inveraray, and Irvine, in returning one member to parliament. A quarry of excellent freestone was some years since opened, about four miles south, on the shore of Loch Feochan, on the property of Dugald M'Dougall, Esq., of Galanach. The town is divided by a small river, the west side belonging to Robert Campbell, Esq., of Sonachan; that on the north, to the Marquess of Breadalbane. In the eastern division is a small handsome church, erected in 1821, as a chapel of ease to the parish. In Tweedale-street is an Independent chapel, built in 1820, and a Secession church, opened in 1835; a handsome Free church occupies a commanding site in the rear of the town.

Oban and its vicinity offer many inducements both to the tourist and antiquarian. Among the antiquities may be particularly noticed the ruins of Dunolly castle, situated a mile north of the town; and three miles distant is Dunstaffnage castle — the latter formerly belonged to the powerful Lord of Lorn, and was demolished by Robert Bruce, in retaliation for injuries inflicted upon him and his followers (after crossing Loch Lomond, on his way to Ireland) from that noble: in the chapel of the castle is a remarkable echo. Six miles to the north, on the opposite side of Loch Etive, are the ruins of Beregonium, the ancient metropolis of Caledonia, and two miles further north is Barcaldine castle. From a hill, contiguous to the town, may be seen the distant objects of Duart castle in Mull; Ardtornish castle, in Morven, the castle of Aross, and the castle of Geoælin. In visiting these, the antiquarian will find much gratification, all of them having been the residences of the ancient Scotch nobles, and even in their present state, exhibiting proofs of their former strength and grandeur. Oban may also be said to rank among the most healthful and pleasing summer retreats in the Highlands of Scotland. Its situation for bathing is extremely good, and it possesses every accommodation for the convenience of the great number of fashionable and wealthy visiters, who are constantly calling here in summer on their way to the fine scenery on the western coast, and in Skye, and to the far-famed islands of Staffa and Iona, imparting a liveliness and interest to the appearance of the town. The several hotels here afford every accommodation to the traveller or tourist, particularly the Caledonian and King's Arms, also the Woodside private hotel. The inhabitants endeavour to imitate the manners and conversation of the visitors, which causes much better English to be spoken, and far more politeness and urbanity of manners to be displayed here than in many other places on this coast. Steam boats ply between Glasgow, Greenock, Inverness, Mull, Staffa and Iona, five or six times a week in summer; to Skye and Stornaway twice a week, and to Liverpool once a fortnight during that season. Fairs, for horses, the Monday and Tuesday before the first Thursday in March; for cattle, on the Monday and Thursday before the last Wednesday in May; for sheep and wool, on the third Thursday in July, and the Friday and Saturday before the last Wednesday in October; and for horses, on the Monday and Tuesday before the fourth Thursday in November.

POST OFFICE, George-street, Alexander Wilson, Post Master.—Letters from EDINBURGH, GLASGOW and all parts of the SOUTH, arrive every day at one, and are despatched thereto every night at twelve.

Letters from ARRAS, TOBERMORY and BUNNESAN, arrive every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and are despatched thereto the same days.

SOUTHEND

Is a parish situated at the southern extremity of the peninsular of Kintyre—the village, which is sometimes called Newton Argyll, is 10 miles s. of Campbeltown. Agriculture and fishing are the predominating occupations of the inhabitants, who, in the summer, reap some advantage from the visits of many strangers to this romantic and interesting part of the country. About half a mile south of the village stands the rock Dounavertie, a spot interesting to the historian, and the antiquarian, as having been the scene of many sanguinary conflicts, with the details of which the intelligent villagers are conservant—especially the ruthless massacre of three hundred of the M'Donalds here by General Leslie, after their capitulation, in 1649. Few traces of the castle are now remaining, but a mile and a half west stands the walls of a church, said to have been founded by St. Columba, who landed in Scotland in 563. It was called Cill-Cholum-Chille, and the burial ground, was formerly divided by a small stream, on the north side of which the Highlanders where interred, and on the south the Lowlanders; but that distinction no longer exists. There is an excellent Inn at Southend, affording good accommodation either to the tourist or traveller. On the Island of SANDA, about three miles distant is a light-house, said to be the best, and most efficient one on the coast. A little to the north of the village stands the parish church: and in the village, the United Presbyterian Church. The parochial school here is a substantial building, and a well conducted institution.

TARBERT (EAST AND WEST), WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

TARBERT, or, as it is sometimes designated, EAST TARBERT, is a small fishing port and village, situated at the head of a fine sheltered harbour on Lochfyne. It is 139 miles w. of Edinburgh, 37 N. by E. of Campbeltown, 39 s. s. w. of Inveraray and 15 s. of Lochgilphead. The town, or village, may be said to form a semicircle round the harbour—the latter, small, and the entrance to it narrow, having several sunken rocks, and consequently difficult of access; but when a vessel has once entered, no water affords more perfect shelter and security. The quays are commodious, and for many years it has been a noted fishing station, particularly for herrings, which are mostly cured for the Glasgow market. In a commanding situation, overlooking the town and harbour, are the remains of an ancient Castle and fortification—formerly a place of great strength, and immediately behind the village, in a southern direction, is a small comfortable kirk, and an excellent school; the latter supported by the General Assembly.

WEST TARBERT is one mile distant, and there, also, is a good quay: it is seated at the head of a loch of the same name, which commences here, and in a circuitous route winds through the mountains to Ardpatrick, beyond which it empties itself into the ocean. The scenery on either side of the loch is remarkably picturesque, embracing mountain, wood, and lawn, with an occasional mansion embosomed in foliage. Two roads branch respectively to the east and west sides of the loch. The road to Ardpatrick winds through a fine country in which many of the mountains were, by the late much respected owner, Lieutenant General Robert Campbell, planted to their summits. About the sixth mile on this road, is Dunmore, the residence of William Campbell, Esq.: the house is hid by its plantations from the road; but from its site there is a pleasing view of the loch and the opposite shore. Four miles further on is the domain of Ardpatrick, the residence of Captain Colin Campbell, R. N., possessing every requisite for a summer residence. At the foot of this domain is a ferry, by which the traveller may past to the opposite side of West Tarbert loch. From Ardpatrick a road branches to the west; and at a distance of four miles Carse is passed, eight miles beyond this is Drimdrissaig, the residence of Dugald M'Neill, Esq., the efforts of whose predecessor—Lachlan M'Neill, Esq., proved so successful in improving the breeds of cattle, sheep, &c. in this part of the country. A mile and a half beyond Drimdrissaig is Ormsary, the seat of William Campbell, Esq. The eastern road runs through the village of West Tarbert to Clachan. Near the sixth mile-stone is the village of WHITEHOUSE, containing a societies' school, and about half a mile above the village is Stonefield, the fine mansion and extensive domain of John Campbell, Esq., who is proprietor of the town and neighbourhood of Tarbert, and who erected in 1837 a new mansion in an enchanting spot, about two miles north of the village, on the west shore of Lochfyne. An extensive fair is held at Tarbert on the last Wednesday in July, which continues three days, and is for the sale of various kinds of merchandise and horses.

POST OFFICE, TARBERT, Archibald M'Calman, Post Master.—Letters from GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, and the SOUTH, arrive every day at fifteen minutes past twelve, and from CAMPBELTOWN every morning at half-past five, and are despatched to GLASGOW, EDINBURGH, and all parts of the SOUTH every afternoon at one, and every morning at half-past five, and to CAMPBELTOWN, WHITEHOUSE, CLACHAN and DUNBAR, every day (Sunday excepted) at a quarter past twelve.

Money Orders granted and paid here.

TOBERMORY,

WITH THE ISLANDS OF MULL, STAFFA, IONA, ULVA, TYREE AND COLL, AND THE DISTRICTS OF ARDNAMURCHAN AND MORVEN.

TOBERMORY is a thriving sea-port in the island of Mull, 171 miles W.N.W. of Edinburgh, 62 N.W. of Inverary, and 30 N.W. of Oban. It encircles the extremity of a fine sheltered bay, and is one of the safest harbours among the Western Isles, being protected from the sound of Mull by an island which stretches nearly across the entrance, but leaving ample room at its northern point for the largest vessels to enter the harbour—though none but small craft can effect this at the south-east point, even at high water. About two miles from Tobermory, in the sound of Mull, a new lighthouse was erected in 1857, which has proved of great service to vessels passing that way, called the Runagaul light. The town is between two and three miles from the main-land of Morven, and derives its name from from a celebrated well or spring, called Mary's well, to which the vulgar superstitiously ascribed many imaginary virtues. The Spanish admiral's ship, Florida, one of the 'Armada,' when at anchor here in 1588, was destroyed by an emissary of Queen Elizabeth's government: part of the wood of this vessel was presented to his Majesty George IV., on his visit to Edinburgh, by Sir Walter Scott; and there is in possession of the Duke of Argyll a large brass gun, that belonged to the same vessel, and found many years since in Tobermory bay. On the west side of the town are the remains of an ancient chapel, dedicated to the Virgin, and of a fortification, understood to be of Norwegian origin. Tobermory belongs to the British society for extending the fisheries and improving the sea-coast of the kingdom. The town which was commenced about 1790, is well built, and possesses two quays: the new quay was begun in 1835, by Colonel Campbell, of Knock, and is quite dry at low water, being two feet deeper than the old quay; the former is a little to the north of the latter, and nearer to the entrance of the bay. The town has increased considerably in this direction of late years, and the harbour is much frequented both by steamers and sailing vessels, which renders better quay accommodation necessary. The church, which was erected in 1827-8, at the expense of parliament, stands in a fine prominent situation, behind the principal part of the town and overlooking the bay, adjoining the church is a parliamentary school, completed in 1832, in which the useful and general branches of education are taught. In the immediate neighbourhood is a beautiful loch, called Mary's lake, situate between two finely wooded hills, extremely precipitous in their descent. This pleasing spot belongs to Capt. Farquhar Campbell, and lately occupied by Hugh Maclean, Esq. of Coll, who greatly improved it, and erected an elegant mansion on the banks of the lake. The tourist will be much gratified by visiting this picturesque scenery, including the three cascades, one of which is particularly grand. Tobermory is the only village in Mull, or the neighbouring islands, of any consequence connected with trade—this is chiefly domestic, with a tolerably productive herring fishery. A branch of the Clydesdale bank is established here, and a good hotel. The sheriff substitute holds a court here once a week, during session, and it is the polling station at county elections, for all voters residing in the islands of Mull, Coll, Iona, Tyree, Ulva and in Morven. By ascending a hill in the neighbourhood a view may be had of the islands of Tyree, Coll, Eigg, Muck, Skye, and various others of smaller importance. The population of Tobermory in 1841, was about 1400.

Mull, which is about twenty-four miles long, and in some places almost as broad, has been much improved of late. Beinmore, the highest mountain in the island, is said to approach 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The island contains many remains of ancient castles, &c., among which, those of Duart and Aross, on the sound of Mull, are well deserving of a visit from a stranger. On the western side, close to the Ross of Mull, has been worked a quarry of red granite or porphyry, some of which was employed by the Duke of Sutherland, in the internal improvements of Dunrobin castle. Fairs in Mull: at Fishnish, a large horse-fair is held on the first Friday after the 20th of August, and for cattle in May and October; at Ross, Morven, and the islands of Coll and Tyree, fairs are held a few days before those at Fishnish.

The celebrated island of Staffa is about fifteen miles distant from Mull. To give a description of this magnificent production of nature is, it must be confessed, extremely difficult. All who have seen Fingall's cave concur in opinion that, when it first bursts upon the view the effect is indiscribable — awe and astonishment so completely fill the mind, that there is no room for minor emotions. The island is about a mile long, and a quarter of a mile broad, and is almost entirely composed of hard dark blue stone, called by geologists trap, it is not in large misshapen masses, however, or formed into layers, as rocks are in most other places, but stands in pillars, close to one another — most of them upright, some much bent, while others lie almost horizontally, they are not round, but have various numbers of faces —some exhibiting three, some four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, and even ten, while others have one half circular, and another angular, they are from one to three feet in diameter, and from 12 to 90 feet in height. Staffa is visited five or six times a week by the steam boat from Oban; the visitors are generally landed at Fingal's cave, stay about an hour on the island to examine its wonders, and proceed to view, for a similar length of time—

The far-famed island of Iona, the earth of which may be termed royal, it is about three miles in length, and one and a half in breadth. It was once the luminary of the Caledonian regions, "whence savage clans and roving barbarians derived" the benefits of knowledge, and the blessings of religion. It is separated from Mull by a chanuel of about a mile in width, and is resorted to during summer by the antiquarian, the historian, the tourist, and even the fashionable—who crowd numerously, some to explore or examine, and others to behold and admire, the sacred ruins that on landing arrest the attention of every stranger; these are pointed out by a person deputed by His Grace the Duke of Argyll. Here the visitor finds himself surrounded by the graves of those who were royal and noble, and holy in Caledonia and Hibernia a thousand years ago; while the thick walls, the massive arches, and the finely wrought pillars of the many sacred edifices which, in remote ages, flourished in this sanctified isle, supply the deepest reflections, and awaken the most solemn feelings in the contemplative mind. A parliamentary church was erected here in 1828, and there is a parliamentary school lately established. The inhabitants have lately made a profitable traffic by disposing of the channel pebbles to the visitors, who now frequent the island. They assert, that the pebbles of a certain appearance are endowed with many secret virtues, given to them by their tutelar Saint, Colombo.

The isle of Ulva, separated from Mull by a channel of about one hundred yards broad, is said to produce the best kelp in the Western Highlands. There is a great number of basaltic columns on the shore. It is now the property of Francis William Clark, Esq., who resides on the island.

Tyree, Westward of Mull, is a very fertile island; it also abounds in marble, of which, it is said, the rocks on its shore are entirely composed; but, from some unexplained cause, the quarries cannot be profitably worked. A new harbour is formed at Heynish; the quay was commenced in 1836. A lighthouse was likewise raised on the dangerous rocks called Sciravore, which lie about sixteen miles south-west of Tyree; it is of granite, obtained from the quarries of Mull, and is considered one of the best and most durable specimens of this kind of architecture in Europe.

Coll, to the north of Tyree, is rather a sterile and mountainous island. On it are the ruins of a castle, which appear to advantage from the sea.

Ardnamurchan, chiefly known from the dangers frequently encountered in the navigation around its projecting point, particularly in boisterous weather, when the tremendous billows of the North Atlantic break against it with awful fury, is a district of considerable length, having Loch Sunart to the south, the Atlantic to the west, the same ocean and Loch Shiel to the north, and Ardgour to the east. It is sterile, but feeds large flocks of sheep, and some cattle, and the hills are stated to be rich in minerals. Upon the point has been erected a lighthouse by the Commissioners of the Northern lights, which is of great service to the navigation of this perilous coast.

Morven is an extensive district, bounded on the south-west by the sound of Mull, on the north by Loch Sunart, and on the east and south-east by Loch Linnhe. The country is hilly, and its shores are partially wooded. It is principally occupied in grazing farms, and contains several respectable gentlemen's seats, but no village of sufficient consequence to command attention.

In concluding our brief sketch of these interesting and not wholly unimportant islands, and the parallel districts on the mainland, we may observe that the scenery connected with them is of a description not easily to be forgotten, by those who have once visited them, it is faithfully pourtrayed by the incomparable Scott in his 'Lord of the Isles'. Ardtornish castle, in Morven, so often alluded to by the bard, is well worthy the tourists notice; as are the interesting remains of Aross castle, the ancient residence of the King's or Lords of the Isles—and Castle Duart, formerly the residence of the M'Leans, in Mull, with Castle Doonan, in the district of Lismore.

POST OFFICE, Tobermory, Eliza J. Graham, Post Mistress.—Letters from Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the South, arrive (from Oban) every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and are despatched thereto the same days, and from Tyree and Coll letters arrive and are despatched once a week.

AYRSHIRE.

THIS is a populous maritime county, on the western coast of the Lowlands; stretching upwards of seventy miles along the shore of the Firth of Clyde, from Kelly-burn on the north to Galloway-burn, which enters Loch Ryan, on the south; its middle part, which is the broadest, extends about twenty miles across. It is bounded on the north and north-east by the small county of Renfrew, on the east by the counties of Lanark and Dumfries, on the south-east by the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and on the south by Wigtonshire. In figure the county resembles an elongated crescent, with its concavity presented to the sea. At the north and south ends the land is diminished almost to a point, being but a few miles in breadth. The superficial extent of the county comprises about 1,050 square miles of land, and six of lakes. It is divided into three principal or grand districts—Carrick, Cunningham, and Kyle. The first lies on the southern side of the Doon; the second comprehends the whole of the county north of the river Irvine, and Kyle division is situate between the rivers Doon and Irvine.

EARLY HISTORY.—This county was anciently inhabited by the British tribe called the Damnii, a branch of the Celtic nation, who survived the period of the Roman yoke, and were, in the course of time, overrun by, and amalgamated with the Scoto-Irish from Kintyre. In 750 these again were partly conquered by a body of Northumbrians, who settled in Kyle. From 843 to 1097, the inhabitants of Ayrshire were governed as a Celtic people, upon Celtic principles. Upon the accession of Edgar, in 1097, the jurisprudence of the county became changed, and an active colonization commenced, which peopled every district with new comers from England. Barons now sprung up, who built castles and churches, and towns arose, which became inhabited by persons engaged in trade. Ayrshire was the scene of perpetual turmoil during the wars of Bruce and Edward. The son of the first Bruce marrying the Countess of Carrick, became Earl of Carrick in her right: and it was their son who, on the expulsion of Baliol, formed pretensions to the throne, which he obtained by his courage, fortitude, and prudence; thus Ayrshire possessed the honour of giving birth to the illustrious restorer of the Scottish monarchy. Some of the valorous exploits of Wallace, in supporting the national independence, were performed in this county. Scarcely any division of Scotland remained so long under the torments of the baronial system as Ayrshire. For centuries the chiefs were perpetually engaged in feuds and rebellions, and so weak or inefficient were the laws, that it was seldom redress or punishment followed outrage. The Boyds, the Dalrymples, the Campbells, the Colvilles, and the houses of Eglinton and Glencairn, had their respective quarrels of long standing, which occasionally ended in reckless violence or sanguinary slaughter. A great proportion of these disturbances arose from contests regarding heritable jurisdictions, such as stewardships and bailiewicks of certain districts. Besides the feuds of these pugnacious barons, the country was frequently distracted by the pride or the crimes of the Kennedys'. So late as the reign of James VI, this powerful clan was involved in a feud of more than ordinary importance, which originated in the cruel treatment of Allan Stewart, the commendator of Crossraguell, in 1570, by the Earl of Cassillis, and his brother, Thomas Kennedy, of Culzean. In the months of August and September of that year, these monsters, with a cruelty almost unexampled, seized the commendator, in order to make him give leases of part of the property of the monastery; and failing to accomplish their ends by fair means, they put him to the torture, by placing his person over a blazing fire. When Kennedy, the laird of Bargenny, heard of this treatment of his friend, he obtained the authority of Government for his liberation, under pain of rebellion. The Earl disobeying this mandate, the laird assembled his retainers, and took the Earl's castle of Dunure, wherein Stewart was confined. The Earl, enraged at this capture assembled his vassals at Carrick and in West Galloway, and besieged his own castle of Dunure, which was bravely defended by Bargenny, who, by the authority of Government, called out the king's lieges in Kyle and Cunningham to his aid. This caused the Earl to raise the siege, and the gallant Bargenny kept possession of the castle for some time. It however originated a feud between Bargenny and the head of the Kennedys', which remained unextinguished for many years, and produced at last a battle in Carrick, in 1601, between the Earl of Cassillis and Gilbert Kennedy, in which the latter was killed, and which subsequently caused the assassination of the Earl's uncle. A subordinate feud arose between Sir Thomas Kennedy and John Mure of Auchendrain, which led to the murder of the former, and to the execution of the latter and his sons. The feud which had lasted so long between the families of Eglinton and Glencairn, produced many acts of violence, and, in 1586, terminated in the atrocious murder of Hugh, Earl of Eglinton, by the Cunninghams of Robertland, at the private instance of Glencairn, the son of that Earl who obtained so much distinction in the history of the Reformation. The laxity of the administration of James VI suffered this infamous matter to be passed over, and the Earl's friends to be released from the sentence awarded against them. The vexations which the people of this county so long suffered by such an ill-organized system, seems to have impressed them with a fervid desire for those political liberties, which they believed were to accrue from the institution of the Covenant. The consequence was, that during the heats of the seventeenth century, few took so active a share in the insurrections which were opposed to royal authority. A committee of the privy council sat at Ayr in 1678, for directing the military execution to its proper objects. In July, 1680, a conflict occurred, wherein several insurgents were taken, and the rebellion on this occasion quelled. Proceedings of this harassing character induced a ready accession to the government of William III, and the conduct of the people who went armed to Edinburgh, to wait upon the Estates, was very magnanimous. It need hardly be mentioned, that the turmoils which had, from a very early period, kept Ayrshire in warlike attitude, and ever ready for tidings of disaster and spoilation, had the natural effect of keeping its agricultural capacities long shut up, and its energies of a useful tendency long untried.

SOIL, SURFACE, &c.—The most fertile part of the shire is the great vale of Cunningham, which is comparatively level; Kyle possesses much valuable land towards the coast, but its interior lies high, and is a rough mountainous territory; Carrick is a hilly wild region throughout, and is only of value or interest in its northern angle, betwixt the rivers Doon and Girvan. In a general sense, the whole district of Ayrshire is shut out, on its eastern boundary, from the adjacent counties, by high ridgy land; and, with little variation, the surface inclines either to the sea, or to the rivers which flow in that direction. The sea coast is mostly sandy, and indented with several excellent harbours. Abundance of seaweed is thrown on the shore, from which great quantities of kelp are annually made; and the coasts are admirably adapted for white fishing. In the rocks are several remarkable caves, worthy the inspection of the curious. The principal eminences are, Knock-Dolton, 930; Knock-Nounan, 1,540; Carleton, 1,554; Knock-Dow, 1,554; Cairntable, 1,660; and Knock-Dollian, 2,000 feet above the level of the sea. There are many elegant seats belonging to the nobility and gentry of the kingdom; among the principal owners are the Earl of Glasgow, the Earl of Eglinton, the Earl of Cassillis, the Duke of Portland, the Marquess of Bute, and the noble family of Hastings. To the south of Irvine stands the ancient castle of Dundonald, once a royal residence, and afterwards the family seat of the Cochranes, Earls of Dundonald.

Produce, Manufactures, Minerals, &c.—It was not until about the middle of the eighteenth century, that the inhabitants of Ayrshire began to discover and avail themselves of its capabilities as an agricultural district. The settlement, at this period, of Margaret, Countess of Loudoun, in Lorn Castle, may be deemed the epoch of efficient improvement; by her great assiduity, precept and example, agriculture was promoted and encouraged; and in a short time the nobility and gentry of Ayrshire began in earnest to improve their estates upon systematic principles, under the skilful direction of intelligent stewards. Farmers were invited by them from the more southern shires, to instruct the tenantry in the management of land according to the most approved methods of the experienced agriculturist. Observing the peculiarities of the climate, and ascertaining the nature of the soil, the judicious culture of the various species of grasses became a primary object, and the general adoption of dairy farms was the natural consequence; this system has been persevered in, and the dairies in this district are superior, perhaps, to any others in Scotland: the value of their product in milk and butter is very considerable, and 'Dunlop' cheese is unrivalled throughout the country, finding a ready market wheresoever offered, and Ayrshire may now be reckoned as the Cheshire of Scotland. The breed of cattle has likewise been much improved. As agriculture thus successfully progressed, excellent roads were formed, and these have recently been followed up by railways for the transmission of heavy goods and persons. From the fostered spirit of industry, and the enhanced value of land, resulted a corresponding exertion for the establishment of manufactures: the abundance of fuel—the plenty and cheapness of the necessaries of life, materials for building, and means of transit to the large towns in the adjacent shires—presented facilities for this purpose which were obvious and encouraging. The manufacture of stockings, carpets, cloths, and bonnets extended generally, but Kilmarnock became the most noted. At the capital of the county have been established dyeworks, woollen manufactories, iron foundries, extensive and numerous steam-engine manufactories, and chemical works; at Catrine, well-known and extensive cotton works; at Cumnock is an extensive pottery; at Irvine is a large brick and drain tile manufactory, likewise a chain, cable and anchor works, and Muirkirk is noted for its ponderous iron works. On reference to the table of population given below, it will be perceived that during the ten years between 1841 and 51, the population of this county had increased upwards of 25,000, since the last mentioned period the increase has been still greater. This large addition to the population, is in a great measure owing to the prosperous manufacturing state of the county. Ayrshire possesses inexhaustible coalfields, freestone quarries, and ironstone mines, with several rich ores, particularly those of lead and copper; marble, gypsum, and marl have been found, and black lead has been discovered; fireproof stone and whetstone are obtained, and many petrefactions exist in various parts of the county. In the hills of Carrick are agates, porphyries, and other valuable fossils; and traces of antimony have not escaped the searching eye of the mineralogist.

Rivers, Lakes, Springs, and Railways.—In the ridge of hills which intersect the district of Carrick, almost all the rivers in the south originate. The Tweed, the Esk, the Nith, the Annan, the Urr, and others, flow to the east and south; while the Stranchar, the Girvan, the Doon, the Ayr, and the Lugar, traverse the county, and pour their fruitful streams into the Irish channel. Besides these, the Irvine, and some smaller rivers, water the northern parts of Ayrshire. All these abound with salmon, trout, and other fresh water fish. In the midst of so many minerals, a number of springs impregnated by their qualities are to be expected; and indeed almost every parish has its mineral water, though none have attained the dignity of spas. There are various inland lakes, particularly in Carrick—the most extensive being Loch Doon, from whence the Doon river flows. Ayrshire participates extensively in the conveniences afforded to commerce and general transit by Railways, and there are several important lines and branches now in operation, and others progressing. The following are the principal, and their names are indicative of their destinations:—the 'Glasgow, Paisley, Ayr and Kilmarnock Railway,' besides those places, takes in its route by branches from the main line Newmilns and Muirkirk; the 'Scotch Western' includes, by branch, Irvine among other towns; the 'Glasgow, Kilwinning, and Ardrossan' visits those places; and the 'Glasgow and South Western,' which passes direct through the county, gives direct communication with all parts south. It is in contemplation to construct a branch from Maybole junction to Girvan.

Ecclesiastical and Civil Divisions, &c.—The whole of Ayrshire was formerly comprehended in the bishopric of Glasgow; and it formed three deaneries, corresponding with the three divisions before mentioned. The county now comprises forty-six parishes, forming two presbyteries in the Synod of Ayr and Glasgow. The contributory burghs (or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate), belonging to this county, are Ayr and Irvine; one member also represents the shire at large.

TOTAL POPULATION OF AYRSHIRE	84306	103954	127299	142584	164477	189925

Note.—(a) The town of Saltcoats is partly in Ardrossan parish and partly in that of Stevenston; the population of Saltcoats town in 1851 was 4338.

(b) The villages of Troon and Shewalton since 1821 have been detached from Irvine and added to Dundonald parish and this accounts for the decrease in Irvine in 1831.

The total annual value of Real Property in Ayrshire, as assessed in April 1815, amounted to £409,983; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, to £520,827 13s.5d.; the amount of Real Property assessed to the Property and Income Tax in 1849, was £608,704.

ARDROSSAN,

A BATHING place and port, in the parish of its name, pleasantly situated on the western shore of Ayrshire, on an accessible point of the coast, and only a mile west of Saltcoats, which occupies another promontory: it is 74 miles s. w. of Edinburgh, 30 s. w. of Glasgow, 25 s. s. w. of Paisley, and 8 N. by w. of Irvine. The town is built upon a plan of regularity and taste; the houses all of stone and of commanding altitude. The visitants in the bathing season will find all the appliances necessary to their enjoyment. The baths include the customary varieties, and are enclosed in a handsome building, both spacious and commodious. The town is chiefly indebted for its existence to the noble family of Eglinton, who had formerly a castle of great strength and extent in the vicinity, but which is now a ruin, the earl having a mansion in the town. There are a large number of villas, many of which exhibit considerable taste in design; and the town is gradually extending in all directions. A large and elegant hotel, with a suite of warm and cold baths, was erected by the late Lord Eglinton, at an expense of £10,000. The public rooms, the bed rooms, offices and stabling are most commodious. There are three banking establishments—that of the Bank of Scotland is a commanding building adjoining the hotel. The Royal Bank Building is near to the railway station and is also a fine building, and the City of Glasgow Bank, at the end of Princes street, is also a prominent object.

The harbour was commenced under the auspices of the before-named munificent patron, who expended nearly £90,000 upon it, and became the sole proprietor both of it and the town, as well as the extensive barony of Ardrossan. Of late years it has been greatly extended, and the yearly increasing business of the port render probable another considerable extension at no distant date. The tide harbour will contain from fifty to sixty vessels. The dock occupies an extent of seven Scots acres, and will admit fifty vessels of from three to six hundred tons burden. Steamers ply regularly between Ardrossan and several parts in Ireland; there is daily intercourse during the greater part of the year between it and the Island of Arran; and the steamers plying between Ayr and Glasgow call at the port during the summer months. There are two yards for ship-building at the harbour, and some extensive timber yards and saw mills. A railway from this port to Kilwinning forms a junction with the Glasgow, Kilmarnock, and Ayr Railway; and the line is continue from the station to the harbour for the transit of coa and iron to the vessels. The new church at the entrance of the town from Saltcoats is built in elegant taste and is a highly ornamental edifice. There are also two fine new churches recently built, in connection with the United Presbyterian and Free Churches. In the neighbourhood is a chalybeate spring, whose medicinal properties are beneficial in cases of debility, scrofula, &c. The picturesque ruins of Ardrossan Castle stand on an eminence overlooking the town There is also upon an adjoining eminence a handsom monument, erected to a deceased philanthrophi gentleman, who, during the latter years of his life, interested himself deeply in the various institutions connected with the town. An agricultural society has been established here, and a coursing club formed. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before Ayr and the Tuesday before Inverness fairs—both in July; on the Tuesday before Falkirk fairs, in September and October, and on the second Thursday in November.

AYR,

THE BURGH OF NEWTON, THE PARISHES OF SAINT QUIVOX AND MONKTON, THE TOWNS OF PRESTWICK AND WALLACETOWN, AND SURROUNDING NEIGHBOURHOODS.

AYR is a royal burgh, and the capital of the county and parish of that name; 77 miles w s.w. of Edinburgh, 33 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 34 s s.w. of Paisley, 12 s s.w. of Kilmarnock, and 11 s. of Irvine; situated in the north-west angle of the parish, where the river of Ayr flows past it into the frith of Clyde. This portion of Scotland has been inhabited from the earliest period of authentic history; for when, in the reign of Severus, the Roman fleet made the complete seaboard survey of Magna Britannica, this part of the coast was crowded with a population that evinced no amicable disposition towards the foreign intruder: subsequently, however, the persevering and insidious encroacher penetrated through southern Caledonia, and the Celtic harp was hushed by the fanning wings of the Roman eagle: accordingly we find that the site of modern Ayr retained, in the 11th century, the undoubted traces of a Roman station; and tradition informs us that a hamlet, the vestige of this station, was in existence until the latter part of the 12th century, when William, surnamed the Lion, erased the odious blot, and laid the foundation of a new town in the ashes of the former conqueror. Here it was that the renowned William Wallace first openly embodied that hardy host which made the Southron 'backward reel;' and the powerful garrison of Edward I. was compelled to cower under his 'thunder arm.' There is still a remnant of the venerable church of St. John, converted by Comwell into a fort. Attached to the old tower of St. John's, a handsome residence, in the old baronial style, has lately been built by the proprietor of the fort, John Miller, Esq. so that this old remnant of a bygone age is likely to survive for many generations to come. At a short distance, on the southern shore, is 'Greenan Castle,' one of those uncouthly constructed square castles so frequently arresting the notice of the stranger in this district; it stands on the summit of a rock overhanging the sea, and, from a distance, has an imposing aspect. In the same direction, on a clear day, may be discerned the celebrated Ailsa Craig, rising 950 feet perpendicularly out of the sea. The bay of Ayr is very much admired, and its graceful curve bears a striking resemblance to the beautiful bay of Naples. The river is crossed by two bridges —the new one of five arches, with balustrades, has few rivals for chaste beauty. Immediately opposite, across the frith of Clyde, is the island of Arran, whose majestic mountains present some features of the sublime, and whose summits are visible to the naked eye, in fine weather, from the headlands of Larne, in the county of Antrim in Ireland. The most conspicuous decoration of the town is the lofty spire, that rises to the height of two hundred and nineteen feet above the New Town-buildings, which were erected in 1828, at a cost of £10,000.: these buildings contain a spacious suite of assembly-rooms, and a public reading-room. The noble tower, called 'Wallace Tower,' in High-street, is another ornamental structure; it is embellished with a statue, by Thom, of the hero whose name it bears. A second statue of this warrior occupies a niche in the wall of a house at the corner of New Market-street. Wellington-square is a fine quadrangle, having a noble erection to form the west side in the court-house and hall, built at the joint expense of the county and burgh, at a cost exceeding £30,000. The east front of this edifice, which is wholly of stone, is ornamented with an imposing portico. A verdant lawn forms the centre of the square, enclosed with rails, and the surrounding houses are inhabited by the genteeler families of the place. In the centre is a fine statue, in bronze, by Messrs. Noble & Gordon, to the memory of the late Brigadier-General J. G. S. Neill, C.B. and aide-de-camp to the Queen, who was killed at Lucknow on the 25th of September, 1857, and who was born in one of the houses in Wellington-square. A large gun, captured at Sebastopol, is placed on an iron carriage at the upper end of the square. In the County-buildings are the public offices, in which are kept the records of the town; and here are held the borough sessions and the courts for the county and burgh. The county gaol is a commodious structure, at the back of the County-buildings, its front looking upon the bay: is is arranged upon the most modern approved system of discipline—about one hundred female convicts are at present kept here. Considerable additions to the town, especially to the westward, have been built within the last few years. A great many neat villas now give accommodation to the natives of Glasgow and other inland localities, who repair to this fine watering place during the summer months.

An extensive trade is carried on in the export of coal from this place to Ireland. Mines of this article, as well as fine quarries of stone, abound in the neighbourhood. The other principal exports consist of iron, coal-tar, casks, lampblack, and water of Ayr stone. Its imports comprise hides, tallow, barley, yarn, linen, spars, deals and hemp. The convenience for shipping is superior to most of the towns on the coast, as the harbour has been much improved by carrying an extensive stone pier into the sea, affording a greater depth of water for vessels entering, and security when in the harbour.

The civil government of Ayr is vested in a provost, two baillies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors. Ayr is connected with the burgh of Irvine, in this county, and Campbeltown, Inveraray and Oban, in Argyleshire, in returning a member to parliament—the present representative is E. H. J. Craufurd, Esq., Jun., of Auchenames. The county constituency numbers 3,865; that of the burghs, 1,039. The lord-lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Eglinton, and John Christison, Esq. is sheriff. The present county member is Lord James Stuart.

An academy, founded by subscription in 1798, stands foremost among the public establishments. It is conducted by a rector and five masters, with able assistants: the superintendence of the whole is vested in certain directors appointed by the Crown, by which the seminary was created a body corporate. The Latin, Greek, English, French, and Italian languages, writing, arithmetic, drawing, geography, navigation, mathematics, &c. are taught in this institution. Ayr library, which contains several thousand volumes, affords recreation to its numerous subscribers. A mechanics' institution, formed in 1825, is now in a flourishing state; it has a library attached, containing more than two thousand volumes. There are other libraries of lesser note, and public reading-rooms in the town's buildings. Three newspapers are published in Ayr weekly, namely, the Observer, on Tuesday; the Advertiser, on Thursday, and the Express, on Saturday. Races are held here annually in the autumn; an excellent pack of harriers hunt in the county; and in the town are spirited curling and bowling clubs. A small but neat theatre occasionally opens, to gratify the admirers of dramatic representations.

The are two churches of the Establishment in the town, one in the parish of Newton, one in Wallacetown, and another at Prestwick. The other places of worship in Ayr and its vicinity are for the Free Church, the United Presbyterians, the Episcopalians, Congregationalists, Reformed Presbyterians, Methodists, Moravians, and Roman Catholics. The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally conducted: the poor are assisted from funds arising from lands and donations, and a dispensary gives medicine and surgical aid to the sick. Besides these, there are a sailors' society, instituted in 1581: a merchants' society, established in 1655; a fund, formed in 1821, for decayed members, their widows and orphans; the Ayr Sabbath School Union Society, and the Ayr Universal Society.

The Scottish bard, Robert Burns, whose 100th anniversary was so universally celebrated throughout the civilized world on the 25th of January, 1859, was born about two miles south of Ayr, in a small cottage, now converted into a public-house; about a quarter of a mile from the house a very elegant monument has been erected to his memory; it is placed on the banks of the river Doon, amidst objects and scenery which had often inspired his muse. The locality of Tam o' Shanter lies in the immediate neighbourhood of the cottage. An elegant and commodious new parish church has been erected close to the monument, of which the Rev. John Lochead has recently been ordained pastor. The Chevalier Ramsay, author of Cyrus' Travels, &c. was a native of the town.

There are two weekly markets—Tuesday, for grain, cattle, and dairy produce, and Friday, for the sale of dairy produce, poultry, and general business. Fairs are held on the Thursday and Friday before the second Wednesday in January: on the first Tuesday in April, for black cattle, &c.; the last Friday in April; the Thursday and Friday before the second Monday in July, and on the second Thursday and Friday in October.

NEWTON parish is divided from that of Ayr by the river, over which there is a handsome bridge of modern erection. Weaving is carried on here, for the Glasgow manufacturers, to a considerable extent: here are also two iron foundries, and the ship-building yard of Messrs. A. & D. Fullarton. The coals from the Ayr colliery are shipped on this side harbour; the colliery is in the parish of St. Quivox, and, from the employment it furnishes to the industrious class, is of material importance to the neighbourhood.

SAINT QUIVOX, a populous parish in the district of Kyle, lies on the banks of the Ayr river, and is bounded on the east by Torbolton, and on the west by Newton of Ayr and Monkton. The parish is nearly all arable, is finely enclosed, and beautified by plantations.

WALLACETOWN consists of a number of streets adjoining to Newton, and is in the parish of St. Quivox. A church of the Establishment was erected in Wallacetown in 1834, and opened on the 8th of March, 1836; it is a very handsome edifice, of the Gothic order; the site is well chosen, being in a populous neighbourhood, on the north-east bank of the river Ayr: it was built by subscription, at an expense of nearly £1,500. and has sittings for upwards of eight hundred persons. Nearly adjoining this church is a Roman Catholic chapel, erected in 1826-7, at a cost of about £2,000.; it is a chaste structure, in the Gothic style, fronted with freestone. In Wallacetown are also chapels belonging to the United Presbyterians, Reformed Presbyterians, and Congregationalists.

MONKTON, a parish in the district of Kyle, lies on the sea coast, betwixt Symington and Dundonald on the north, and Newton and Saint Quivox on the south. The parish formerly extended southward to the river Ayr, and comprehended the present parish of Newton, which was erected into a separate parochial district in the last century; it now includes the ancient and abrogated parish of Prestwick. The village of Monkton is situated on the high road to Glasgow, and distant four miles from Ayr. There is a station of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway about a quarter of a mile from the village.

The small town (or rather village) of PRESTWICK, or Prestevick, is one mile and a half from Ayr. It was at one period a place of some consequence, having been created a burgh of barony at an early date; and its charter, which was renewed by James VI. in 1600, granted to it a weekly market and an annual fair. The former has fallen into disuse, from the proximity of its more thriving neighbour, Ayr. The market cross, which is of considerable antiquity, still exists; and it has its gaol and council-house. In the latter the bailles and freemen meet quarterly, to regulate the affairs of the burgh; and the Prince of Wales is recognised as the superior of the town. There has been erected here a handsome church, for the accommodation of the combined inhabitants of Monkton and Prestwick. A few years a golf club was formed here, and it has now about one hundred members, comprising some of the best players in Scotland and England.

BALLANTRAE AND COLMONELL

BALLANTRAE is a small sea-port in the parish of that name, 105 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 68 S. W. from Glasgow, 34 S. of Ayr, 24 N.N.E. of Portpatrick, 18 N. of Stranraer, 13 S. by W. of Girvan, and 25 S.S.W. of Maybole: situated near the south-western extremity of the county, and on the banks of the river Stinchar, which here falls into the Frith of the Clyde. The approach to the town from Stranraer, is over the river, across which is an excellent stone bridge of three well-proportioned arches. On the right, near the bridge, stand the ruins of Ard-Stinchar castle, that formerly belonged to the Hamilton family, and was inhabited by them about one hundred and seventy years ago; the ancient clock, belonging to the tower now standing, is still used as the time-keeper for the town. The place is principally supported by its fishery of salmon and cod-fish, the salmon fishery belongs to the Earl of Stair. Old Kirkcudbright kirk, now in ruins, gives a mournful yet pleasing effect to the surrounding scenery. The present kirk is a neat modern building, ornamented with stone, in the plain Gothic style. There are several schools in the parish, including Sunday, parochial, and private schools. In addition to his salary, the master of the parochial school enjoys the interest of £400, bequeathed for the education of the poor children of the parish. There are two resident magistrates; and the nearest court is held at Girvan, where small debts are recoverable only by summons. Ballantrae is without either fairs or weekly market, but there is an annual cattle show in the month of June.

COLMONELL is a parish, bounded on the north and west by the mouth of the Clyde—the village, a small one is situated 5 miles E. by N. of Ballantrae, on the north bank of the Stinchar—a stream famed for its salmon and trout. In the village is a parochial school and an antiburghers' meeting-house, there is also within the parish a Cameronian place of worship. The extent of this district is twenty miles in length by nine broad; it is composed of good pasture, and is undergoing great improvements. There are in all twenty-three inheritors, but the chief part is the property of the Duke and Duchess de Coigney, Sir William Fettis, the Marquess of Ailsa, Dr. Hamilton, and Mr. Thomas Kennedy, of Dunure. The picturesque ruins of Craigneil, Kirkhill, Rockdolean, Pinwherry, Knockdaw, and Carleton Castles, are to be seen in this parish, which also abounds in lime. The nearest approximation for persons desirous of visiting the far-famed Ailsa Craig is from LENDLEFOOT, in this neighbourhood. Fairs are held here on the first Mondays in the months of February, May, August and November (old style); there are also four quarterly cattle-markets at the village of Barrhill, seven miles distant, in this parish.

BARR

IS a parish, lying on the banks of the rivers Gregg and Stinchar—the village, a small and neat one, is 8 miles E. by S. from Girvan and 21 S. from Ayr. The greatest part of the parish is intersected by the river Gregg; and about a mile from the village are the ruins of old Kirk Dominae. Barr parish is principally sheep pasture; its extent is twelve miles by nine. The hiring fair for servants, which, of late was held at (Kirk Dominae) is now held at Barr on the first Thursday after the 26 of May. The chief landed proprietors of the entire district are the Marquess of Ailsa and Sir James Ferguson. The public erections are an Established Church, a Free Church, with a school connected and a parochial one.

POST OFFICE, Jean Alexander, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive (from GIRVAN) at twelve noon, and are despatched thereto every afternoon at half-past three.

BEITH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

BEITH is a market and post town, in the parish of that name, district of Cunningham; 62 miles W. by S. of Edinburgh, 19½ S. W. of Glasgow, 11 S. S. W. of Paisley, 5 N. by E. of Dalry, and 12 N. by E. of Saltcoats. It is situated near the confines of Renfrewshire, on an eminence commanding a fine and extensive view of the beautifully diversified country around, of which the Loch of Kilbirnie, at the distance of about a mile, forms a charming feature. The town, which contains many excellent houses, is gas-lighted, but irregularly built, it is of modern date, comprising at the commencement of the last century only a few humble habitations. Its neighbourhood is now the residence of many respectable families; and until within these few years was a place of some considerable trade. it is still noted for its manufacture of linen thread, of which a large quantity is made here by the Messrs. Crawford, both for home and export trade. The manufacture of silk goods too, was formerly extensive, but this has been almost entirely superseded by that of cotton and woolen, in which the majority of the inhabitants are now employed by the manufacturers of Paisley and Glasgow. The principal branches are silk printing and dyeing, in addition to those already mentioned; (for which there is a respectable establishment at Roe Bank, the most extensive in Scotland) lime burning, and the making of ropes and twine. Three banking houses are established in the town—they are branches respectively from the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Clydesdale Banking Company,' and the 'Union Bank of Scotland.'

The whole of the parish of Beith is enclosed and subdivided, and is almost all arable: and the tenants of this and the neighbouring parish of Dunlop may be said universally to make cheese, known by the name of 'Dunlop cheese,' which is held in as high estimation in Scotland as the cheese of Cheshire or Gloucestershire is in England. The value of this commodity sent annually to market from this parish has been calculated at upwards of £4,000. The neighbourhood of Beith produces coal, and abundance of limestone. In 1807 a very handsome church of the establishment, with a tower, was erected on the most elevated part of the town; its site is 343 feet above the level of the sea. The other places of worship are a Free Church, and two for United Presbyterian congregations. The town house was built by subscription in 1817; the late W. Wilson, Esq. of Crummock, was a liberal contributor. The upper part of the building contains a court-room and reading-room; the lower part consists of shops, the rents of which are applied to purposes of public benefit. There is an excellent parochial school: connected with the latter is a school of industry for females. There is also a Free Church school. At GIFFEN, a short distance from the town, are the ruins of the once stately castle of the Montgomeries; there is also another ruin at Hasselhead; and at the top of Cuff-hill, a considerable eminence, is a druidical remain, known by the name of 'Rockingstone'—Two large stone coffins supposed to be likewise of druidical origin, were discovered here forty-five years ago. The market is held on Friday; and the fairs on the first Fridays in January and February (old style), and on the 30th of August.

CATRINE IN SORN AND MAUCHLINE.

CATRINE is a thriving manufacturing village in the parish of Sorn, 72 miles W.S.W. of Edinburgh, 32 S. of Glasgow, 14 N.E. of Ayr, 12 S.S.W. of Kilmarnock, 5 N. from Old Cumnock, and 4 N. from Ochiltree; pleasantly situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north bank of the river Ayr. This place has risen from insignificance to a considerable town. In 1787 its site contained only a blacksmith's shop and a meal mill, while its present population numbers 2,500. The cause of this surprisingly rapid increase is the erection of cotton works by the late Claud Alexander, Esq. of Ballochmyle, who, having acquired a large fortune in the East Indies, purchased the land for the purpose of establishing works thereon, by which he might increase the value of his property here. But not understanding the cotton business himself, he formed a partnership with the late David Dale, merchant of Glasgow, with whom he carried on the business until the 13th. of April, 1801. when it was transferred to new proprietors. These extensive works employ a large number of hands; and excellent schools, with a library of five hundred volumes are among the privileges enjoyed by the work-people, who are in great part owners of the houses in which they live. Sorn Castle, about a mile and a half from Catrine, once the seat of the Loudon family, is now the property and residence of Graham Somervell, Esq. who, with Miss Farquhar, Lady Boswell and Boyd Alexander, Esq. are the principal heritors of the parish of Sorn—which abounds with coal, limestone, and ironstone. Dugald Stewart, Esq. the late celebrated professor of moral philosopy in Edinburgh, was born in the neighbourhood of Catrine.

The parish of SORN, is bounded on the east by Muirkirk, on the south by Auchinleck, on the west by Mauchline, and on the north by Galston and Strathaven: its form is nearly square, measuring about six and a half miles each way. Formerly this parish formed a part of the extensive one of Mauchline; the parish church stands about three miles distant from that village. The land, originally moorish, has been much improved and well inclosed; and there are fine plantations near the Ayr, which river runs through the parish, from east to west.

MAUCHLINE, a considerable town and capital of its parish, is two miles and a half from Catrine; situated in a pleasant part of the county, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful country, interspersed with several elegant mansions. The weaving of cotton goods in this as in all the towns of the neighbourhood, gives employment to many of the inhabitants. Besides this branch, there is another arrived to great importance, and in which three firms are established here—this is the manufacture of a beautiful description of snuff boxes, cigar cases, &c. Messrs. W. and A. Smith have long enjoyed the patronage of Royalty. The buildings of the town are neat and possess an air of pleasing variety. Mauchline Castle is an ancient building well deserving the notice of the antiquarian. There are several excellent benevolent societies for the relief of sick members and poor widows, and a bible society has been, for a length of time, promoted with success. The parish school is well conducted and numerously attended, as also is the new educational institution, founded by James Stewart, Esq., of Haughhead. In this establishment fifty poor children are taught free, and the remainder are charged a moderate sum. Burns resided several years at Mossgiel, a small farm, about half a mile to the north of Mauchline, on the left side of the road from thence to Kilmarnock. The steading may still be seen environed by a few trees, as well as the fields, in traversing which, it is said, he composed some of his best poems. His chief resort when he visited Mauchline, was the public-house, kept by John Dow, which still stands—a thatched house of two flats, nearly opposite the churchyard gate. The cottage of 'Poosie Nancy,' or Mrs. Gibson, the scene of the 'Jolly Beggars,' stands more immediately opposite the churchyard gate. Mauchline kirk, the scene of the 'Holy Fair,' was of the pure barn species. There is now an elegant new church, in the Gothic style, with a steeple. In the surrounding cemetery may be seen the graves of the Rev. Mr. Auld, Nanse Tinnock, and several other persons who figure in the satires of Burns; and on the banks of the Ayr, at a short distance from Mauchline, is the scene of some of the bard's more pleasing poems—his lyrics particularly.

CUMNOCK, AUCHINLECK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMNOCK (or OLD CUMNOCK) is a considerable village of thoroughfare, 60 miles s.w, of Edinburgh, 16 E. of Ayr, and the same distance s.s.E. of Kilmarnock: situated on a line of road between Dumfries on the south-east and Glasgow on the north, 44 miles from the former town, and 38 from the latter. The principal part of the town occupies the site of what was formerly the church-yard; the present cemetery was, at one period, the place of execution, and contains the remains of three persons who were shot on the spot, in 1685, by a party of Highlanders, for their adherence to the covenanted work of reformation; and the corpse of Peden, a martyr of the covenanting body, who died in the parish of Sorn, was exhumed, by a party of dragoons, after being interred six weeks, and ignominiously buried at the gallows foot. The village, which is of an irregular triangular form, is seated in a deep sheltered hollow, at the confluence of the Glisnock and Logan waters; it was celebrated for the manufacture of those beautiful wooden snuff-boxes—a species of trade which originated here above fifty years since, and, with some few exceptions, as Lawrencekirk, Catrine, and Mauchline, was confined to Cumnock. This branch of industry is now extinct here. Three banks are in operation, namely, a branch of the Clydesdale Banking Company, one of the Bank of Scotland, and one of the Royal Bank of Scotland; there is also a bank for savings, and a public library—the latter established, in 1792, by a company of shareholders.

The places of worship are, a church of the Establishment, a Free Church, one of the United Presbyterian, and a chapel each for Independents and Roman Catholics. To the parochial school, which is well attended, the sum of £25. annually was left by Charles Duncan, Esq. late merchant of London, and a native of Cumnock: the late Marquis of Bute paid the teacher a salary for educating twenty poor children of this parish, and he also paid the schoolmasters of New Cumnock and Ochiltree for the instruction of ten children in their respective parishes. The castle of Ferrenzean, now in ruins, is in the neighbourhood; it gives the title of baron to the family of Dumfries. About two miles east from Cumnock are the Lugar Iron Works, under the superintendance of an able manager, Mr. Robert Marshall; the company have built, for the workmen and their families, numerous comfortable and neat cottages, forming a considerable village: no trade, however, is carried on here but that connected with the company's store, although the population exceeds fifteen hundred. The market at Cumnock is held on Thursday; and the fairs on the fourth Thursday after Candlemas' on the Wednesday succeeding the last Tuesday in May, and on the Wednesdays after the first Tuesday in July and after the Third Tuesday in October, all old style.

AUCHINLECK (pronounced Affleck) signifying a field or rock, is a parish eighteen miles in length, by only about two in breadth, watered on its northern extremity by the Ayr, and by the Lugar on the south. Coal and limestone are produced here, but the soil is for the most part rather unproductive. The village, a respectable little place, is situated somewhat above a mile from Old Cumnock, and about three from Sorn and Catrine. There is one establishment for the manufacture of snuff-boxes. The places of worship are—an Established church, and one belonging to a congregation of Seceders. The ruins of Auchinleck castle stand in an angle, formed by the Dupol burn and the Lugar; and in the neighbourhood is the place of Auchinleck, a handsome mansion, erected in the last century by Lord Auchinleck, senator of the college of justice, and father of the eminent and amiable James Boswell, Esq., the friend and biographer of Johnson: the house is still the property of the Boswell family. A well attended fair, for the sale of lambs, is held annually on the last Tuesday in August.

DAILLY

Is a parish, in the district of Carrick—the village is 93 miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Maybole and Ayr) 47 s. by w. of Glasgow, 46 N. N. E. of Portpatrick (by the new road, which is longer by three miles than along the coast), 15 s. by E. of Ayr, 7 s. from Maybole, and 6 N.N.E. from Girvan. The situation of this village is not exceeded by any in the county for beauty; it is seated in a fine fertile valley, near to the pellucid water of the Girvan, which is fed by a number of small streams, some of them descending through deep and woody glens, admired for their picturesque and romantic loveliness; while the elegant mansions of the affluent that are interspersed throughout the district, and the hoary ruins of two ancient castles, contribute to the general interest of the scenery. The parish is six miles in length by about five in breadth: the uplands are bleak and pastoral; but the more level parts are well cultivated, enclosed, and planted. Coal and limestone abound in several parts of the parish. The Duke and Duchess de Coigney, Sir James Ferguson, and Sir John Andrew Cathcart, are the principal heritors of the land in this neighbourhood.

The old parish church, dedicated to Saint Michael, has fallen to decay; the present structure, which is neat, was erected in 1766. A parochial and a Sunday school, for the children of the poor, have been established in the parish.

DALMELLINGTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALMELLINGTON is a parish, about ten miles in length, by three in breadth—the town or village, a burgh of barony, is 72 miles s. w. from Edinburgh, 49 s. of Glasgow, 42 N. w. of Dumfries, 24 s. s. E. of Kilmarnock, 15 s.E. of Ayr, 14 E. of Maybole, 12 s. of Old Cumnock, and 7 E. of Stratton. This thriving little place is pleasantly situate on the north bank of the water of Doon, and near to the base of an eminence, from the summit of which a fine view is obtained of a varied character, comprising rude and lofty mountains and the softer features of cultivation. Besides the trade enjoyed by the town, it derives some advantage from the resort of parties of pleasure, and for fishing; those who intend to partake of the latter amusement will find on the banks of the Loch Doon neat boats, furnished by the proprietor of the inn at this place, the 'Black Bull.' The loch is a beautiful sheet of water, 'with a hard rocky shore, extending eight miles in length and one in breadth, abounding in trout of fine flavour. On an island in the lake are the remains of Balloch castle. Some years since a fishing party discovered, at the bottom of the loch, what appeared to be boats, and having obtained the necessary assistance, they succeeded in raising three canoes, the largest measuring twenty-four feet in length by four in breadth, hewn out of a solid log of oak; two were much decayed, but the third was so little impaired as to allow of its being floated on the surface, with a person in it, for a considerable time; it is now preserved by the Honble. F. M. Cathcart, of Berbeth, for the inspection of visitors. In Dalmellington are a public and private library, and a reading room well furnished with standard works, periodicals and newspapers; a sum has been left in trust for the support of the latter and the private library, and for the education of a certain number of children.

Situated about three miles south-east from Dalmellington, on the road to Ayr, are the Dalmellington extensive iron works and collieries. From these works have originated the two villages of CRAIG MARK and WATERSIDE, containing a population of two thousand or upwards, chiefly employed by the company. All the houses in these two villages are supplied with gas from the works. So prolific are the coal works here, that the article is sold at the low price of three shillings and sixpence the ton. The company have a shop for supplying their workmen with the necessaries they may require, but there is no other trade in the villages. John Houldsworth, Esq., is the resident managing partner, assisted by Mr. John Hunter.

POST OFFICE, DALMELLINGTON, James Smyth, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from AYR) every morning at a quarter past eight, and are despatched thereto at half past one in the afternoon. Money Orders are granted and paid here,

DALRY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALRY is a parish in the district of Cunningham —the town is 69 miles W. by S. from Edinburgh, 25 S. W. of Glasgow, 16 S. S. W. of Paisley, 5 S. W. of Beith, 4 N. of Kilwinning, and 7 N. of Saltcoats; pleasantly situated on a rising ground, surrounded by the rivers Caaf, Rye, and Garnock, which run in different directions near the village. The town consists of eight streets, three of which diverge from a centre forming a small square; many of the houses are well built, and the shops are neat, but although gas light has been some years in use in the houses, no public lamps have been erected in the streets. The branches of manufacture existing in the town and parish are those of worsted spinning (extensively carried on by Mr. Biggart, Bridgend Mill), and silk and harness weaving, in which many of both sexes are employed; while a a considerable number of females are occupied in sewing and embroidering, usually denominated 'Ayrshire needlework,' for the Glasgow and Paisley manufacturers. Two Branch Banks have been established in the town, and lime, coal, and iron stone abound in the neighbourhood. One limestone quarry at AUGHINSKEITH, two miles from Dalby has been reported by scientific men to be particularly rich in geological remains. There are several public houses and three which belong to the grade of Inns. Near to Dalry are extensive iron works, belonging to the Eglinton Iron Co., but although a large number of hands are employed, the traders in the town derive little advantage from their expenditure, as the company have opened a large store from which every necessary is served out to their workmen at fair prices.

To the west is a beautiful natural cascade, which has a curious and singular appearance during the continuance of frost. Two miles from Dalry, is Blair House, an ancient pile of architecture, (a portion of which retains the original date of 1203), it is at present the residence of Captain W. F. Blair, R. N., who courteously permit strangers to inspects the beautifully laid-out grounds, and his fine museum of foreign and British curiosities. Here is also a cave, evidently the work of nature, and well-deserving the examination of visitors to this district: it is about 103 feet in length, and from five to twelve in height; the roof is encrusted with petrefactions, and over the entrance projects a vast rock, 30 feet by 27. Its interior resembles Gothic arched work; near the middle it expands into a spacious chamber, 35 feet long by 12 broad, and 12 feet in height. In former times popular superstition peopled it with elves—it accordingly received the appellation of 'elf-house;' in later days, under the arbitrary reign of Charles the II., it afforded a refuge to the covenanters of this parish from the violence of their infuriated persecutors. In Dalry parish also is 'Camp-hill,' where the Scottish army is said to have encamped previous to the battle of Largs, in 1263.

Dalry bestows the title of Baron upon the eldest son of the Earl of Glasgow. The places of worship are two churches of the establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, one belonging to the Evangelical Union, and one Roman Catholic. There are several public, and two or three private schools. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there are fairs in January, May and July, none of which are well attended.

POST OFFICE, Court Hill-street, DALRY, Janet Stirrat, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at twenty five minutes past six, and evening at six, and are despatched to all parts every morning at a quarter before twelve, and evening at ten minutes past nine, and twenty five minutes after seven. Money Orders are granted and paid from nine in the morning till six in the evening.

GALSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GALSTON is a parish, in the district of Kyle-Stewart—the village, a considerable one, or perhaps more properly the town, is eligibly situated on the left bank of the Irvine, on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr, and from Dumfries to Glasgow; it is 22 miles s. from the latter city, 16 N.N. E. of Ayr, and five from Kilmarnock; seated in a hollow, sheltered on all sides by rising grounds. The chief employment of the industrious class is weaving: there are two flour mills, and one for paper mill-board—the latter erected early in the fifteenth century. Another occupation is also presented to the labouring class—that of raising coal, of which a large quantity is obtained from the estates of the Duke of Portland—who is superior of the parish. There are several benefit societies belonging to the town, and some excellent schools. Blair's school occupies a handsome building, opened in 1841, under the will of the late Charles Blair Esq., of Galston, who bequeathed certain heritable property, which was to accumulate until the income amounted to £200. per annum, for which one hundred and two children of either sex are educated and clothed. There are likewise two sabbath evening schools, wherein two hundred children receive instruction; also a subscription library, a missionary association, and a bible society. A school house has been erected here, at a cost of about four hundred pounds, the sum being raised by public subscription. A United Presbyterian church of Gothic architecture; also recently erected, cost about eleven hundred pounds.

The parish extends about thirteen miles in length, by from four to five in breadth; lying in the upper part of the country, contiguous to Lanarkshire; and separated by the Irvine from the parish of Loudon on the north, Sorn bounding it on the south. The surface is diversified with hills, but the land is generally arable, and there is a considerable quantity of wood. The district is watered by some small tributaries of the Irvine, and the river Avon, which rises in the upper part of the parish. About a mile from the town is Loudon castle, a large and magnificent structure, in the modern castellated style: this, together with the old castle of Cessnock and Bar, surrounded as they are by natural and artificial woods, highly enhance the beauty of this district—in which is also Paties' Mill, celebrated in the delightful song called 'The Lass of Paties' Mill'. The annual fairs are on the third Thursday in April, the first Thursday in June, and the last Wednesday of November.

POST OFFICE, GALSTON, Matthew Robertson, Post Office.—Letters arrive from all parts (from KILMARNOCK) every morning at twenty five minutes past seven, and are despatched thereto every afternoon at twenty minutes past two. Money Orders granted and paid here.

GIRVAN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIRVAN is a parish, in the district of Carrick—the town, a burgh of barony, is 99 miles W.S.W. of Edinburgh, 56 S.S.W. of Glasgow, 31 N.N.W. of Portpatrick, the like distance N.N.E. of Stranraer, 21 S. by W. of Ayr, 13 N. by E. of Ballantrae, 12 S.S.W. of Maybole, and 6 S.W. of Dailly, situated on the left bank of the Garvan or Girvan, near to its influx with the sea, and at a point exactly opposite the islet called Ailsa Craig. This rock, which is fifteen miles distant, rises out of the Frith of Clyde, to the height of a thousand feet. It is two miles in circumference, and the top, which is conical, is covered with a luxuriant crop of heath, grass, and other plants, which feed great numbers of goat and rabbits. In one place the nettles form an impenetrable forest, six feet in height, and all the other plants likewise attain a proportionable gigantic size, All around, on the precipitous sides of the rock, uniformly nestle almost inconceivable numbers of solan geese, puffins and gannets, which flutter about, and produce an incessant deafening noise. On a long terrace or shoulder of the craig, at the elevation of 200 feet from the base, stand a deserted square tower, or castellated house, still very perfect as a ruin. Higher up issue two sparkling and beautiful springs of water, one of which forms a small marshy plain, covered with various plants, amongst others the hydrocatile vulgaris, of extraordinary magnitude. The rock belongs to the Marquess of Ailsa, who draws from it a yearly rental of about £30, which is paid by the feathers of the fowls and the rabbit skins. Naturalists and botanists would find a visit of value, in increasing their knowledge of the vegetable world.

The harbour of Girvan, now convenient for shipping, underwent great improvement at the expense of the late Sir H. D. Hamilton, then the sole proprietor. Steam packets between Glasgow, Ayr, and Stranraer, call of Girvan, and land or embark passengers and goods, by means of light boats. Large quantities of grain, of various kinds, are annually exported hence, chiefly to Liverpool and Glasgow. The trade in coal and lime is important—the mines of the former and the quarries of the latter being numerous in the neighbourhood, but the principal business of the town consists in the manufacture of a variety of cotton and other goods, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, which affords employment to the bulk of the inhabitants. The government of the town is vested in two bailies and twelve common councilmen — four of the latter being chosen annually, upon the retirement or otherwise of the like number. on the 12th of October, the Duchess de Coigney, or her representative, is superior of the borough. A police station is now in erection here, it is contemplated to cost £450.

The places of worship are two churches of the establishment; two Free Churches of Scotland, and others for Reformed, and United Presbyterians, and Reformed Protestants. The Episcopalian Church, which has recently been erected here, is a neat structure of Gothic architecture — the interior of which is beautifully decorated, it also has a very commanding pulpit—it was erected at a cost of eleven hundred pounds. To the parochial school a valuable donation was made by the late Mrs. Crawford, of Ardmillan, who left the interest of £1,000 for ever to the teachers, for the education of forty children, subject only to the deduction of two guineas, to be distributed in small prizes amongst the pupils. The same munificent lady left also the interest of £1,000, of which £12 are given to the precentor of the church for the instruction of ten of the children in sacred music, and the balance to be divided among poor householders, not receiving parish relief. Here is also a charity school supported by various donations and subscriptions from the gentry and others residing in the town and neighbourhood. A market, chiefly for grain, is held on Monday; and the fairs are on the last Mondays in the months of April and October, for stock, hiring servants, and general business.

POST OFFICE, Isabella Muir, Post Mistress. — Letters from alll parts (except the places hereafter mentioned) arrive every morning at ten minutes past seven, and are despatched thereto every evening at twenty minutes past ten.

Letters from STRANRAER, NEWTON-STEWART and BALLANTRAE, arrive every evening at a quarter to ten, and are despatched thereto every morning at ten minutes to eight.

Money Orders granted and paid here from nine until six.

IRVINE,

WITH THE PARISH OF DREGHORN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

IRVINE is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, a seaport, and the capital of its parish, in the district of Cunningham; 67 miles W.S.W. of Edinburgh, 25 S.S.W. of Glasgow, 11 N. of Ayr, the same distance S. of Beith, and betwixt 6 and 7 W. of Kilmarnock, agreeably placed on a rising ground, on the north bank of the river Irvine, about a mile from its junction with the sea, and upon the line of the Glasgow and Ayr Railway. The situation of the town is dry and healthy, being altogether of a sandy bottom. All the streets are broad and airy. The old steeple, with court-house, council chambers and gaol, that occupied the centre of the main street, has been removed, and a new structure, from a beautiful design, erected. Irvine is a burgh of great antiquity, as appears from its records, Alexander II. having granted a charter to the burgesses, confirming some previous royal grants. From another similar document, it appears that the burgesses were in possesion of the entire barony of Cunningham and Largs. The burgh is governed by a provost, three baillies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors, and unites with Ayr and with Campbelton, Inverary and Oban, in Argyleshire, in returning one member to parliament; the present representative is Lord Patrick James Crighton Stuart, and the number of constituents at the last election was two hundred and thirty-five. A baillie court is held every lawful day, as business may require, and one for the recovery of small debts, before the justices, is also held every Monday. There are several commodious inns; the King's Arms and the Eglinton Arms are both, as commercial and posting houses, well worthy of public support. Recently splendid branch establishments of the Royal and Union Banks have been built here.

The parish church is a handsome building of large dimensions, with a spire and clock, and stands on a rising ground in the centre of the church-yard: it is an ornament to the place. There are six other places of worship, including a 'Quoad Sacra,' and two Free churches, which are all ornamental erections. At the north end of the town an academy, surrounded by extensive play-grounds, was erected in 1814, at an expense of £2,250., of which sum the burgh paid £1,633, and the remainder was made up by public subscription. In this institution, which is an honour and ornament to Irvine, there are three principal masters, besides assistants, by whom are taught, on very moderate terms, Latin, Greek, the modern languages, mathematics, writing, arithmetic, &c. Many valuable prizes are awarded at the annual examinations; and recently the sum of £1,000. was left to this institution by John Ferguson, Esq. of Cairnbrook, the interest of which is proposed to be given annually in bursaries, at the disposal of his trustees. The pupils attending this academy have been particularly successful in carrying off the first bursaries and prizes at Glasgow College, they having for the last eight years taken the first, second and third prizes in mathematics, &c. There are several large boarding seminaries in the town, the principal of which is the Rector's, where there is a large private playground. There are also several ladies' schools, and a large and well conducted free school; also a female free school, erected by the late generous and amiable Countess of Eglinton, and still maintained by that noble family. On the south side of the river, but connected with the town by a fine stone bridge of four arches, is an extensive suburb, but in the parish of Dundonald: this section of the town has also two large public schools. It abuts on the Frith of Clyde, and includes the harbour and quay, and contains a ship-building yard, saw mills, three large engineering and foundry yards, and limekilns. There is an extensive export of coal from this port, also a growing trade in the export of iron. Amongst the names distinguished in literature, natives of Irvine, those of Montgomerie and Galt are proudly eminent; here also Burns, Scotland's national poet, served his time as a flax dresser, and the house in which he wrought, and was burnt out of, is pointed out to strangers. The Burns Club of Irvine possesses the most valuable of his manuscripts, from which the first edition of his poems was printed, namely, 'The Cotter's Saturday Night,' 'The Holy Fair,' 'The Twa Dogs,' &c. Dr. Montgomerie, the discoverer of gutta percha, was also born here. Here was invented the screw propeller so early as 1824 or 1825. Messrs. William M'Cririck and Maxwell Dick constructed a variety of screws, and, during 1827 and 1828, made an extensive series of experiments with working models, to determine the best length and angle of screw. In these trials they applied varied arrangements of screw to each side of the vessel. In this way they discovered the most powerful description, as a strong person would do in pulling an oar against a weaker one. This object being gained, their next plan was to fix the approved screw in the best dynomical position, namely, in the stern of the boat, which they, in their experiments, had also proved. The following is interesting, as being the first attempt at a practical introduction:—In December, 1828, Mr. Dick learned that Captain (afterwards Sir John) Ross, with whom he was intimately acquainted, was about to return to the Arctic regions, taking with him a paddle steamer, he immediately wrote to him about the submerged propeller, pointing out to him its peculiar advantages amongst the loose floating ice, and strongly urging him to adopt it for his ship instead of paddles. A correspondence, the posted letters of which are still preserved, ensued, and continued until the Captain's departure towards the spring of 1829. In one letter Mr. Dick proposed to run up to London with one of the models, in order that the Captain might test the propeller for himself. He, however, fixed a meeting in Glasgow, but though Messrs. Dick & M'Cririck eagerly availed themselves of the appointment, an unfortunate circumstance prevented Captain Ross keeping his engagement. After this disappointment Mr. Dick wrote him a letter, dated 24th March, 1829, in which are the following passages:—"The propeller, with the universal joint, I think admirably suited for your steam vessel, as it would give you the power of making your way through the ice with much greater ease, for it acts simultaneously as a rudder and propeller. This is the one power I should like you to see; the small space it occupies, the ease with which it would pass through the loose floating ice, are some of the recommendations of this propeller, which I should like to see fitted upon your steamer." Mr. Dick, speaking of the paddles, continues:—"But the nature of its acting is so very different from the blades of a screw working entirely under water, in a line with the wake of the vessel, that I wish that yould had had this application of the stern screw with you in your perilous voyage." Although now too late for him to think of adopting the screw for this voyage, Captain Ross was nevertheless anxious to see the model, and requested that it might be forwarded by his coaling ship, the John's, which was to start on a certain day from the Clyde, and join him at Lochryan. Mr. Dick thereupon resolved to go with it himself, and accordingly proceeded to Greenock, on reaching this place he found the John's had left shortly before, and was by that time as far as Rothsay Bay. He, however, secured a steamer, about to start for Rothsay, in the hope of still overtaking the ship, and on his passage he discovered her beating down the Frith. On landing at Rothsay he proceeded with all speed in a carriage to the south end of the island of Bute, where he saw her opposite Largs, he believed he might yet get on board, but was unsuccessful. After this pursuit Mr. Dick returned to Irvine, and despatched the model overland to Lochryan, accompanied with a letter to Captain Ross, instructing him how to manage it in making experiments. The model reached its destination in good time, but still another untoward circumstance was to prevent the captain making any use of it. This was the mutiny and desertion of the John's crew. While on the eve of starting, occasioned by the delay of the steamer, and the nature of the seamen's engagements, which so disconcerted the plans of the gallant captain, that anything like experimenting with a model could not be looked for, with its precious contents the box was, therefore, returned to Irvine, unopened. On the 12th November, 1829, this model was next sent by Mr. M'Cririck, with a full description of it to the Royal Scottish Society of Arts, Edinburgh. And early in 1830, it was taken by Mr. Dick to London, where, accompanied by Mr. Andrew Smith, engineer, Princess-street, Leicester-square, he placed the same model in the hands of Mr. Aiken, the secretary of the Society of Arts, Adelphi, and he afterwards furnished (for use of said society) a full description of it in writing. The committee on mechanics' of this society, as well as the Edinburgh Society, received it with disfavour, stating in their report, that it "that it did not possess sufficient novelty to require their attention." Mr. Aiken having intimated the adverse nature of the London Society of Arts report, Mr. Dick, on the 16th February, 1831, wrote to Mr. Andrew Smith, asking the favour of his procuring the model and its appliances from the society and re-transmitting them to Irvine, which he did in March, 1831. The model and propeller have ever since been sacredly preserved, fitted up exactly as they then were by Messrs. M'Cririck and Dick, and of the identity of the whole there is a great amount of evidence. Irvine stands within two miles of the far-famed seat of the Eglinton, the field of the tournament of 1839, to which the noble earl permits the greatest freedom of access. The market is held on Monday, and the fairs on the first Wednesday in January, the first Tuesday in May, and the third Wednesday in August.

KILBIRNIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KILBIRNIE, or KILBIRNY, is a populous village in that parish, district of Cunningham; 64 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 26 s.s w. of Glasgow, the like distance N. of Ayr, and three from Beith; eligibly situated on the banks of the Garnock, in the heart of a fine country, and within a mile of the loch of Kilbirny, which extends two miles in length by half a mile in breadth, and is well stored with perch, trout, and eel. The importance of this village has been greatly augmented of late years by the establishment of three extensive mills—namely, two for the spinning of flax and the manufacture of linen thread, worked by the Messrs. Knox; and the Kilbirnie Cotton Works Company's Mills, managed by Mr. Archibald Prentice. A branch from the Clydesdale Banking Co., has recently been opened here, under the management of John Alexander, Esq. Glengarnock Iron Works is an extensive concern, for the manufacture of pig iron, situated about a mile and a quarter to the south-east of Kilbirnie. These works, which employ more than two thousand persons (including those engaged in raising coal for the use of the furnaces), are superintended by Mr. John Jack, the acting manager. The workmen inhabit a newly erected village, and the company supply them with the necessaries required from a store, and their children with instruction in a school maintained by them. The Kilbirnie Iron Foundry is situated near the railway station, and employs also a good number of hands. In Kilbirnie are two good schools—the parochial one, rebuilt in 1849, partly by assessment, assisted by subscriptions; and the Free Church school, erected by means of a government grant, aided by subscriptions. Kilbirnie is noted for its manufacture of fishing nets, by machinery, Mr. James Walker being very extensive in that business.

The old castle of Glengarnock is perhaps one of the most ancient, as well as the most stately ruins in Ayrshire: it is supposed to have been the residence of the once famed family of De Morville, which flourished in great splendour during the reigns of Alexander I., David I., Malcolm IV., and William the Lion; they held the high office of constable of Scotland, and were lords of Galloway and Cunningham. There likewise exists the extensive ruin of the old house of Kilbirnie, long the residence of the ancient family of Crawford, of Kilbirnie. Some time after the death of George, late Earl of Crawford, a person came from Ireland; calling himself John Lindsay Crawford, and assuming to be the heir male to the title and estates: this claim excited a great sensation in the country for several years; but the pretender being convicted of vitiating written evidence, in support of his assumption, was transported to Botany Bay for seven years. Upon his return, however, he renewed his demands, and a society of noblemen and gentlemen in London assisted him; but, after a minute and careful investigation, the claim was decided to be unfounded, and was consequently abandoned. At the present time, the estates of Kilbirnie are possessed by the Earl of Glasgow. Congregations of the Established Church, the Free Church, and the Reformed Presbyterian, have their respective temples for worship. The parish of Kilbirnie contained in 1831, 1,541 inhabitants, in 1841, 2,631, and in 1851, 3,399.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY ON THE GLASGOW AND SOUTH WESTERN LINE.

Station—about a mile and a quarter south-east of the village—Robert Walker, collector

KILMARNOCK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF RICCARTON, KILMAURS, FENWICK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILMARNOCK, is a large and important manufacturing town, in the parish of that name, and district of Cunningham; 65½ miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Glasgow), 21½ s.s.w. from Glasgow, 12 N. by E. from Ayr, and between 6 and 7 E. by N. from Irvine; situated on level ground, near the confluence of the Kilmarnock water with the Irvine. Two centuries ago, this now thriving and populous town was a mere hamlet, dependent upon the baronial castle in its neighbourhood. The advantages of the place, as a site for manufactures, were the presence of coal, healthiness of situation, a populous country around, and abundance of provisions: for many years and generations, however, it seems to have been distinguished only for the production of the broad flat bonnets, so long the characteristic wear of the Scottish lowland peasantry, as also the striped cowls which yet bear the name of that town. As this business increased, the population augmented; and in the year 1731, the number had swelled so much, that the parish church was found inadequate for its accommodation, and a new one was erected. Subsequently, and for a considerable period, the staple manufacture was that of carpets, and in this branch it yet stands pre-eminent. In 1832 the ascertained product of this article amounted to £150,000; it is made of every possible kind and texture, from the plainest to the richest colour and fabric: a few years since, the Brussels carpet was successfully imitated; and after that, a variety, termed the three-plie, of extreme beauty and durability was introduced. An extensive trade is carried on in the manufacture of shoes for exportation,—likewise in that of leather, for the tanning and dressing of which, there are several highly-respectable and large establishments. Two breweries, the same number of rope walks, several extensive nursery grounds, four iron-founding and machine making establishments; the Caledonian foundry, belonging to Mr. Andrew Barclay, being the most extensive, and carried on in a highly spirited and scientific manner. One particular description of productive industry and skill seems, however, of late years, to have outstripped all those before mentioned—namely, the making and printing of shawls: for, in the year 1832, the amazing number of 1,128,814 of this denomination of garment issued from the manufactories of this place, amounting in value to upwards of £200,000; the demand since that year greatly increased, and the productions of the various establishments in this branch are excelled by no other town. The shops of Kilmarnock are, many of them, very handsome, and well furnished with taste in the various wares suitable to the inhabitants of a large and respectable town. The banking establishments are branches of the Bank of Scotland, of the Royal Bank of Scotland, of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, and the Clydesdale Banking Company, together with a Bank for Savings. Surrounding the town are extensive coal-fields, from which fuel is obtained for the works of Kilmarnock, besides large supplies transmitted continually by railway to Troon and Irvine, where they are shipped to various places. There are five incorporated trades, namely, the bonnet-makers, skinners, tailors, shoemakers, and weavers; the first named is the most ancient—it was incorporated in 1646.

The aspect of the town is agreeable, especially in its central part, where the streets are regularly laid out, and the greater portion of the houses are of freestone; it has of late considerably extended to the south and east, and in these directions has now many elegant edifices. The Town-house, built in 1805, contains a court-room for the magistracy, and public offices. In 1814, a superb and commodious news-room was erected in the centre of the town, serving the double purpose of a reading room and a place of general resort. The new court-house, in St. Marnock street, erected in 1852, is an elegant structure, attached to which, are the sheriffs chambers, and offices of the procurator fiscal, and in the same locality a new goal has recently been built. Kilmarnock posesses an excellent academy, in which various branches of education are taught by able masters; there are, besides, several private schools of a high character, and many others that impart instruction to children of the poorer classes. The institutions likewise comprise some well-conducted societies, amongst which, are the Procurators' and the Merchants'; a philosophical institution, and also an Athenæum, with numerous benefit clubs, associations, and several libraries—amongst the latter is the Kilmarnock library, opened in 1797, and now numbers in its collection nearly three thousand volumes. A great object of interest in this town is the observatory, erected by its proprietor, Mr. Thomas Morton, at an expense of £1,000; who also originated many important improvements in the manufacture of carpets. The observatory, which is seventy feet in height, and furnished with valuable telescopes and other apparatus, stands on a fine site, that commands a delightful view of the surrounding country as far as the Frith of Clyde. Mr. Morton has obtained considerable celebrity for his mechanical genius, and has received various honourable testimonials from his countrymen and the Board of Trade, and in 1825, he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1847 was erected in the market cross, a very handsome monument to the memory of Sir James Shaw, Bart., late Lord Mayor of London, who was a native of Moss-head in this neighbourhood, where he was born in 1774, and died on the 22nd October, 1843. The statue of the deceased is eight feet in height, mounted on a pedestal of the same altitude. The former, which is cut out of a solid block of marble, weighing ten tons, represents him in his civic decorations as Lord Mayor, and is, altogether, a very fine production of art. The civil government is vested in a provost, four bailies, and eleven councillors; the magistrates preside in their civil and criminal courts by turns, and the justices sit once a fortnight in what is called the small debts court. This town joins with Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, Renfrew, and Rutherglen, in returning one member to parliament. The Duke of Portland is the principal proprietor of Kilmarnock and its neighbouring lands.

Kilmarnock consists of two parishes—High and Low—each containing an established church. In the latter parish there has been erected, in addition; a large and handsome edifice, connected with the establishment, possessing accommodation for 1,700 persons: it is ornamented with an admirable Gothic tower, and cost £5,000. The United Presbyterian church, King street, is a very neatly designed relief church, of recent erection, with an elegant spire, it is a very conspicuous object in the scenery of the town; there are besides, two other United Presbyterian chapels, and one for the Independents, one for the Reformed, with several other places of worship for various religious denominations, including the new English or Episcopal church. In a dry and elevated situation near to Saint Andrew's church, was opened in 1838, a public cemetery, covering an acre of land, purchased by means of a town's rate.

The most remarkable object in this vicinity is the ruin of Dean castle—an ancient, extensive, and well defended mansion, formerly the property of the Earls of Kilmarnock; it stands in a 'dean' or hollow, less than a mile north from the town; it was burnt down in 1735, from the carelessness of a servant girl, who, in preparing some lint, for spinning, heedlessly let it catch fire. When in a perfect state, it was considered capable of sustaining a long siege; as it had the means of drawing secret supplies through its subterranean ways, that communicated, it is said with Coperton castle, two miles distant. Kilmarnock house, another edifice once belonging to, and the last residence of, that noble family, is also in the parish: from this house proceeded the last unfortunate Earl in 1745, to join the standard of rebellion, which cost him his head. This building is now occupied as a parochial school. The markets, which are held on Tuesday and Friday, are abundantly supplied with every necessary article of domestic consumption, including grain and cattle. Fairs are held (for cattle) second Tuesday in May, last Thursday in July (commonly called 'the gooseberry fair'), and the last Thursday in October for horses.

The parish of RICCARTON is in the district of Kyle, lying on the left or south bank of the Irvine river, which separates it from Kilmarnock. The village stands on an eminence, a mile to the south of that town, on the right bank; but is almost connected with Kilmarnock by a long street. The parish extends about six miles in length, by between two and three in breadth; and includes the post office village of HURLFORD, at which latter place there is an extensive iron smelting works called the Portland Iron Works, a large fire clay works, and several extensive collieries,—a very handsome Free church has also been erected here, and a large subscription school built for the education of the children of the working class. The village of Riccarton is remarkable for having been the residence of the venerable Sir Rowland Crawford, the maternal uncle of Wallace, with whom, it is said, the hero sometimes sojourned; and it was to Riccarton that he generally retired after performing any of his very daring exploits, before he openly unfurled his country's banner. On avenging the treacherous murder of his uncle and other chieftains, by burning the barns of Ayr, he took his way by night to this village, accompanied by a few followers; when he reached a certain eminence about six miles from Ayr, he turned round, and seeing the flames still ascending, exclaimed with stern exultation, 'the barns burn weil!' From this laconic expression (tradition adds) the spot obtained the name of 'Burn-weil,' which it still retains. The church of Riccarton is a modern structure, having been erected in 1823; it has a fine steeple, and from its elevated position, has an ornamental effect upon the country round. A new bridge across the Irvine materially improves the approach from the Ayr road to Kilmarnock. A considerable quantity of coal is raised in this parish. The Duke of Portland is the principal landed proprietor.

KILMAURS is a parish, in the district of Cunningham—the town, a small one, and burgh of barony, is two miles from Kilmarnock, situated on the right bank of a rivulet, called Kilmaurs' water, or 'Carmel water.' It was erected into a burgh of barony by James V., at the instance of Cuthbert, Earl of Glencairn, and his son, Lord Kilmaurs. The government of the town is vested in two bailies (chosen annually by the portioners), before whom debts may be recovered. Kilmaurs is composed principally of one street, in the middle of which is a small town-house, with a steeple and clock. Formerly this place was somewhat noted for the manufacture of clasp-knives, or 'whittles'—the sharpness of the edge of which instruments gave rise in Ayrshire to a peculiar expression of comparison: a man of acute understanding, and quickness of action, is said to be 'as sharp as a Kilmaurs whittle.' The most prominent trades now, are those of shoemaking and weaving, for the Glasgow and Paisley houses. Coals are raised in the parish, the surface of which consists of large level fields, interspersed with gentle declivities and elevations; the summits of the latter are well wooded, and the whole district has a pleasing appearance. There is an old pile of building near to the church, seemingly of very ancient origin; but with respect to its founder, or the date or object of its erection, even tradition itself is silent. In the cemetery of the Glencairn family, adjacent to the church, is a piece of beautiful sculpture, a specimen of the taste and execution of former times, erected as a monument to the memory of the chancellor, William, the ninth Earl. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian church, and ample means of education are afforded the children of the inhabitants by the burgh school, and a parochial school, besides one or two private establishments. The market, which was for a long period held on Thursday, has fallen into disuse, but fairs are still maintained on the 11th of June, and on the third Wednesday in that month, and the 11th of November.

FENWICK is a parish in the district of Cunningham, about nine miles in length by six in breadth—the kirktown is cheerfully situated about three miles N. by E. from Kilmarnock, on the banks of the Mehernock stream, on the road to Glasgow. There is another village, sometimes called ROSE-FENWICK, on the same road, about a quarter of a mile south from Kirktown. At a former period, the district was a fen or moss, and hence it is supposed to have acquired its name; but it has undergone most material improvement, and the greater portion of the parish is now under cultivation. Guthrie, a noted champion of the Covenant before and after the restoration, was the minister of this parish, he was a celebrated and very eccentric preacher, distinguished by the title of 'the Fool of Fenwick,' an appellation which even appeared on the title-pages of his published sermons. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one for an United Presbyterian congregation. Cattle fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday in November.

KILWINNING

IS a parish in the district of Cunningham—the town, a thriving little one of manufactures, is 24 miles S.S.W. from Glasgow, 3 N.W. of Irvine, 4 N.E. of Saltcoats, the same distance S. of Dalry, 10 W.N.W. of Kilmarnock, and 5 from Androssan—to which there is a railway. It is situated on rising ground, about two miles from the sea; stretching westward from the right bank of the Garnock, and approached by excellent roads, skirted by beautiful fields. The weaving and manufacture of gauzes, muslins, shawls, &c. are carried on to an important extent, for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, to which they are conveyed by the local agents. There are considerable iron and coal works in the neighbourhood, and in the town, a very excellent inn (the Eglinton Arms), a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and one of the City of Glasgow Bank. The agricultural produce of the parish is considerable; and coals, which are obtained in abundance, are conveyed by a railway passing from east to west across the parish. The only remarkable objects are the picturesque ruins of the ancient abbey, founded by Hugh de Morville in 1140, and the beautiful tower of a church, to which its style of architecture bears no resemblance; this tower cost, exclusive of the old materials, the sum of £2 000, raised by subscription, and to which the Earl of Eglinton was a liberal contributor. The present earl has a fine mansion in the neighbourhood, called Eglinton Castle. Kilwinning was the first place in Scotland where freemasonry was established; it is said to have been introduced by the foreign architect who was employed in erecting the monastry here. Besides the distinction acquired from its ancient masonic lodge, it is also remarkable for being the seat of a company of archers, ascertained to have existed so early as the year 1488; and the society at the present day is most respectable. Fairs are held on the 1st of February (new style) and on the first Wednesday after the 29th October. Population of the town in 1851, 3,265, which, having increased considerably, the population of the entire parish is now estimated at over 8,000

KIRKMICHAEL, CROSS-HILL AND DALRYMPLE.

KIRKMICHAEL is a parish in the district of Carrick—The village is 76 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 22 S. from Kilmarnock, 10 S. of Ayr, the same distance E. of Dalmellington, 8 N.E. of Dailly, 4 W. by N. from Straiton, and 3½ E. from Maybole, pleasantly situated in a valley, on the road from Newton-Stewart to Glasgow, 36 miles from the former, and 44 from the latter. The general surface of this parish is hilly—towards the south and east mountainous and rocky; but the whole is more or less cultivated. The Girvan runs through the parish—the Doon is its boundary for several miles, and the Dyrock water flows through the village—which latter derives its name from a church that formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Michael; the present religious structure, which is neat and commodious, was built in 1787, on its site. In the churchyard is the tomb of Gilbert M'Adam, who was shot, in 1685, by the laird of Colzean and Ballockmyle, for his adherence to the covenanters. The annual fair is held on the first Thursday in October. The population of the parish (including the small village of CROSS-HILL in 1841, was 2,933, in 1851, 3,262.

DALRYMPLE is a small village and parish in the district of Kyle, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Doon, 4 miles N. from Kirkmichael. The parish, which is about eight miles at its extreme length, and three in breadth, occupies some beautiful undulating and flat land, mostly arable. In the upper portion of the parish is a coal mine, and in some other parts lime abounds. The name Dalrymple is said to be derived from Dalrymole, 'signifying the dale on which the king was slain,' and it is supposed that Coilus, a king of the Britons, was killed in battle in this place; its Gaelic name, however, was Dail-a-Chruim-Puili, or 'dale of the crooked pool.' Near the Roman road, which intersects the parish, was found in a moss, a vessel of Roman bronze, by antiquarians conjectured to be of that kind used by by their priests in their sacrificial oblations; and in 1834 was discovered, near the same spot, an ancient vase, both these relics are in the possession of the Rev. Mr. Wallace, the minister of Dalrymple. In the parish are three British fortlets on commanding sites, and the ruins of three castles; these, with the beautiful loch of Martanham, the waters of which are covered annually with the yellow and white water lilly, are objects of considerable interest and curiosity with the visitor to this district.

KIRKOSWALD

IS a parish in the district of Carrick—the village, old and picturesque, is 13 miles s. from Ayr, and 4½ from Maybole; situated on a line of road from Portpatrick to Glasgow—90 miles from the former, and 48 (by the new road), from the latter town. The parish is highly interesting, as containing within its limits several objects of great attraction for the stranger and tourist, The sea-coast presents a sandy beach, with a beautiful rich sward to the very sea-mark; and there are two lakes, from whence flow many small streams, that wander through the district towards the sea. Of late years there have been raised various delightful plantations, particularly near the shore around Culzean Castle, the beautiful seat of the Marquess of Ailsa. The mansion, which is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, is placed on a rock overhanging the sea; and on the land side are delicious gardens, with a noble park of great extent. Not far from the castle is a fort, mounted with thirteen guns, and a mortar battery—both kept in effective order. In a low valley, between Kirkoswald and Maybole, are the remains of the abbey of Crossraguell, founded by Duncan, first Earl of Carrick, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary: at one period it was possessed by Cluniac monks from Paisley; at the Reformation it became the property of the Earl of Cassillis, but it now pertains to Sir James Ferguson, of Kilkerran. From the coast-road between Girvan and Maybole may be seen the ruins of Turnberry Castle, once the residence and property of Robert Bruce. Within view of this memorial of former centuries, and not more than a mile from it, lies the farm of Shanter, once the residence of Douglas Graham, the hero of Burn's poem, 'Tam-o'-Shanter;' though that honour is disputed by some in favour of another farmer, called Thomas Reid. The population of the parish, in 1841, was 2,030, and in 1851, 2,242.

POST OFFICE, KIRKOSWALD, Jane Orr, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from MAYBOLE) every morning at ten, and are despatched thereto every evening at half-past five.

LARGS AND FAIRLIE

LARGS popularly called the Largs, is a neat town and sea-bathing place, in the parish of that name; 73 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 14 s. from Greenock, and 20 N. from Irvine; charmingly situated on the Frith of Clyde, in the northern extremity of the county, in a remarkably healthy and well sheltered district, particularly on the north-east, in which direction it is separated from the better cultivated districts by a range of hills, hence a proverbial expression still in use 'Out of the world into the Largs'. It is now one of the most favourite retreats on the western coast for ruralising and bathing, the communication with Glasgow, and other large towns on this side of the country, being rendered convenient and expeditious by means of steam boats, which ply daily on the Clyde. During the season it is enlivened by the presence of a great number of visitors; and the general accomodation afforded by the abundance and superior style of the lodging-houses, together with the agreeable manners of the residents, fully entitles it to the extensive patronage it enjoys. An elegant suite of baths was erected, by public subscription, in 1816, some of them after the model of those at Seafield, Leith; and there is one vapour bath; attached to these is a reading-room, supplied with various papers. There are two good inns and two temperance hotels. The monetary transactions of the town, are facilitated by branches respectively of the National Bank of Scotland, the City of Glasgow Bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland. Considerable business is carried on in the fishery. The annual fair, commencing on the first Tuesday in June after the 12th (Saint Columbus day), is a scene of bustle and active traffic, it lasts for two days, and is well attended by people from the neighbouring counties who resort hither to dispose of their agricultural produce and cattle.

The parish church, a handsome structure of stone, with a spire and clock, is a great ornament to the town. There is also a Free Church, one for United Presbyterians, and an English Chapel. There is a benevolent society, called the 'Dorcas Society', composed of ladies resident in the neighbourhood, from which, clothing is supplied to the poor families in the parish; this and two Sabbath schools, form the principal chair-

table institutions. Two circulating libraries afford literary amusement to domestic readers; and a company of comedians generally attend during the summer; while the Brisbane Academy (an endowed establishment)), together with the Parochial and Free Church school, afford the inhabitants ample means of educating their families. Few districts possess more romantic scenery: the old castles of Skelmorlay, Knock, and Fairley, with Brisbane House, ornament the parish. It was on the plain of Largs that the celebrated battle was fought between the Scots, under King Alexander the third, and the Danes under Haco, King of Norway, in their last invasion of this country, in 1263. In the glen near Kelburn is a cascade, which has a fall of fifty feet perpendicular—and various other natural beauties, arrest the attention and excite the admiration of the traveller. An aisle in the church, built by Sir Robert Montgomery of Skelmorley more than two centuries back (the sculpture and painting of which would be no discredit to a more advanced age), has underneath a vault, in which lies the body of Sir Robert, enclosed in a leaden coffin, bearing a latin inscription, signifying 'I was dead before myself, I anticipated my proper burial alone of all mortals, following the example of Cæsar'; alluding it is, said to Charles the fifth, who, it may be remembered, had his funeral obsequies performed previous to his death. The explanation usually given of this strange affair is, that Sir Robert was a very pious man, and was in the habit of making nocturnal descents into the vaults to perform his devotions, thus burying himself alive. Sir James Montgomery of Skelmorlay, a subsequent representative of this family, was a distinguished leader among the Scotch Presbyterians, at the time of the revolution, but is reported to have afterwards made himself conspicuous by entering in a conspiracy with the ultra jacobites, for the restoration of King James. The population of the town and parish in 1851, was, 3,710, since that time there has been a very marked increase.

FAIRLIE, or Fairley, is a small village in the parish of, and about two and a half miles south from Largs. In the vicinity is Kelburn Castle, the picturesque seat and family mansion of the Earl of Glasgow; likewise the ancient square tower of Fairlie Castle, formerly a seat of a family of that name. The extensive plantations around Kelburn Castle are highly ornamental to the general landscape. There are, besides, some very elegant villas, which harmonize with and adorn the prevalent features of the parish; and the marine scenery is truly beautiful and enlivening. The are two places of worship in Fairlie, one an Established Church, the other a Free Church, and in connexion with each there is an excellent school. Considerable business is done here in boat building, being noted for the beauty of build and excellent sailing qualities of the yachts launched from the various yards.

MAYBOLE AND THE VILLAGE OF CULROY.

MAYBOLE is a small, neat market and post town, the capital of its parish, in the district of Carrick; 87 miles s. w. from Edinburgh, 52 N. by E. from Portpatrick, 44 s.s.w. from Glasgow, 25 N. from Ballantrae, 22 s. by w. from Kilmarnock, 12 N. by E. from Girvan, and between 8 and 9 s. from Ayr. It lies in a charming part of the country, on the face of a gentle eminence with a southern exposure, and surrounded by lovely scenery, formed of parks, highly cultivated, and hill and dale, with a sea-view of the 'busy Frith of Clyde' opening on the west. Maybole was created a free burgh of barony in November, 1516, on a grant to Gilbert Earl of Cassilis, the patron, and to the provost and prebendaries of the collegiate church of Maybole, to which belonged the lands whereon the town stands. In October, 1639, an act, ordaining the head court of Carrick to be held at Maybole, was passed by the Lords of the Articles. The streets of the town are narrow, and contain no eminently fine places or public buildings; several of the dwellings, now inhabited by weavers, bear a venerable aspect, and doubtless were, at a distant period, the domiciles of more dignified personages. The mansion-house or castle of the Cassilis family is the finest surviving specimen of the winter seats formerly existing in Maybole: it is a stately well-built structure, standing in centre of the town, and is said to have been the residence of the repudiated Countess of Cassilis. It is now occupied by Thomas Dykes, Esq. factor to the Marquess of Ailsa. The building now used as the town hall belonged to the Kennedys of Blairquhan. The principal business carried on here is weaving for the Glasgow houses, in which branch there are many local agents employed, and many families busily occupied.

The collegiate church has been for some time in ruins, and the ground appropriated as a private cemetery for the Cassilis family. The parish church, a Quoad Sacra, a Free church, United Presbyterian church and Episcopal church, and a Roman Catholic chapel, are the places of worship. The parochial school dispenses instruction to about one hundred and seventy boys and girls, who are taught all the useful, and some of the polite branches of literature, there are besides several other schools public and private. Yearly and quarterly meetings of the 'Carrick farmers' society are held in the town-hall; the annual one is on the first Thursday of August, and the quarterly on the first Thursday in the months of February, May and November; the quarterly in August merges in the yearly assemblage. A 'Knox' club was instituted in 1824, for the purpose of commemorating the zealous exertions of that extraordinary man. In the vicinity are many interesting objects, among which is the celebrated ruin called Crossreguel (noticed in the sketch of Kirkoswald), and Kilhenzie castle, which was in a similar state of dilapidation has of late years undergone repairs, and is now the residence of Mr. William Kennedy, it once belonged to a branch of the Cassilis family, who were for a long period hereditary bailies of Carrick. Ancient coins have been frequently found in considerable numbers. In the neighbourhood are two remarkably fine springs of water, popularly named 'St. Cuthbert's' and 'Well-trees;' the latter is said to yield ten thousand imperial gallons per hour. The market is held on Thursday; the following are the annual fairs—Beltan fair, the third Thursday of April, and Halloa fair, the third Thursday of October.

CULROY is a small village, in the parish of Maybole, three miles and a half from that town, on the road to Ayr, from which it is five miles and a half distant. A manufactory for woollen goods is established in this village.

MUIRKIRK

Is a parish in Kyle district—the village, a thriving and considerable one, is 50 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s. from Glasgow, 26 e. by n. from Ayr, 24 s.e. from Kilmarnock, and 16 n.w. from Sanquhar; situated near the right bank of the Water of Ayr, at the junction of the roads leading from Glasgow to Dumfries, and from Edinburgh to Ayr; and in a district rude and bleak—the land being but partially reclaimed from its original mossy and moorish character; another considerable portion is, however, profitably employed in grazing and pasture, and in 1835 the black-faced sheep fed in this parish carried the Highland Society's prize. Though nature has not here been bountiful to the farmer, or encouraged the labours of the agriculturist, she has been very kind to the miner—for coal, iron, and limestone are liberally dispensed throughout the territory. At the 'Muirkirk Iron Company's works are three blast furnaces constantly in operation, for the manufacture of pig iron. There are, besides, extensive tile and lime works, belonging to Lord Henry Bauting, who, with Lord Douglas and the Honourable Colonel Cathcart, are the principal proprietors of the land in this parish. Its length is nine miles, by an average breadth of about six; bounded on the north-east by Douglas, on the south and south-west by Auchinleck, and the west and north-west by Sorn and Galston. The places of worship here are one Established Church, a Free Church, and one for the United Presbyterians. There is also a library in the village, which is well conducted. Fairs are held in the months of July, August, and December.

POST OFFICE, Margaret M'Caul, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from DOUGLAS) every morning at half-past nine, and are despatched thereto every day at one.

Money Orders granted and paid here.

NEW CUMNOCK

IS a parish in the Kyle district—the village is 43 miles S. of Glasgow, 21 S.S.E. of Kilmarnock, the same distance W. by S. of Ayr, 10 N. by E. of Dalmellington, 12 W. by N. of Sanquhar, 24 N. W. of Thornhill, and 5 S.E. of Cumnock. The parish, which lies on the eastern boundary of that of Cumnock (or Old Cumnock) is in general hilly, and affords excellent pasture for sheep; but there are many spots of rich arable land. The river Nith takes its rise in the south-west end of the parish, and runs through the centre of the whole; and there are several small lakes, the sources of the Lagar and Afton. Various mines of coal are worked in this neighbourhood, the property of Sir Jas. Stewart of Menteath, John Hyslop, Esq., and John Hunter, Esq.; and lime abounds in different parts of the district. A new church was erected in 1833—a neat and well-adapted building, sufficiently capacious for a congregation of a thousand persons; there are likewise a Free church, a dissenting meeting-house, a parochial school, and a free school. A subscription library was established in 1828, it contains upwards of six hundred volumes. Some years since a new road was formed, about four miles in length, up the glen of Afton; by continuing the line six miles farther, a communication would be effected between this part of Ayrshire and the adjoining county of Galloway, which would shorten the present distance by twelve miles—all carriages being now obliged to take the circuitous route of Dalmellington. The Free church stands on this site. A cattle fair is held in the village, on the Thursday immediately preceding Whitsuntide.

POST OFFICE, Samuel Cook, Post Master.—Letters from CARLISLE, &c, arrive every morning at twenty minutes past nine; despatched thereto every evening at fifty minutes past eight.

Letters from KILMARNOCK, &c., arrive every evening at twenty-five minutes to nine; despatched thereto every morning, at forty-seven minutes past eight.

NEWMILNS AND DARVEL.

NEWMILNS is a neat market and manufacturing town, and burgh of barony, in the parish of Loudoun, district of Cunningham; 24 miles s. of Glasgow, 18 N.E. of Ayr, 7 E. by s. of Kilmarnock, and 16 N. of Cumnock; situated on the bank of the river Irvine, about two miles east from the village of Galston. It was made a burgh of barony by King James IV. in 1490; and the charter was confirmed by Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun, in 1566. The bailies are competent to hold courts, from which there is no appeal, except to the court of sessions; and in other respects their jurisdiction is as ample as that of most royal burghs. There is a police commission for the better regulation and improvement of the town, consisting of seven members; the chief magistrate is the chief commissioner. The Marguess of Hastings is superior of the burgh; Thomas Brown, Esq. of Waterhaughs, has also considerable property here, and is superior of a neighbouring village called GREENHOLM. The weaving of muslins is called on here extensively—one thousand hands being employed in this branch of manufacture. The places of worship are an Established Church, a Free Church, and a meeting-house of the United Secession body. The parochial school, and a Sabbath evening school, are both well attended: in the latter more than three hundred children of the working classes receive instruction.

In the centre of the town is seen the remains of an old castle, said to have been erected as early as that of Edinburgh, but record is silent or obscure concerning its ancient possessors. Within the parish, and about a mile and a half from the town, is Loudoun Castle, the elegant seat of the Marquess of Hastings: it is a large and magnificent castellated pile, standing amidst beautiful natural woods and tasteful artificial plantations. Near the mansion is the old parish kirk of Loudoun, bearing the early date of 615. The only part now standing is that which formed the choir, and is now the place of sepulture of the noble families of Loudoun and Hastings; and here rest the remains of the lamented Lady Flora Hastings, whose death, in the prime of life, caused such a mournful sensation, as connected with the court of her present Majesty.

DARVEL is a small village, in the same parish as Newmilns. In this neighbourhood is Loudoun Castle, before noticed; and the woods and braes of Loudoun furnish a theme for one of Tannahill's best songs. The Marchioness of Hastings benevolently erected a school and formed a cemetery in this village, the school is still maintained by the family.

OCHILTREE

IS a small but pleasant village, in the parish of that name, district of Kyle, 64 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 49 N.W. from Dumfries, 37 S. from Glasgow, 28 N. by E. from Girvan, 22 N.W. from Sanquhar, 16 S. from Kilmarnock, the like distance N.E. from Maybole, 11½ E. from Ayr, and 4 from Old Cumnock, situated on the outh side of the Lugar water, and on the high road from Ayr to Dumfries and Edinburgh. The country around is delightfully picturesque, and the face of the parish, which is pretty level, with some agreeable undulations, is well watered. The great Scottish reformer, John Knox, married his second wife at this village; she was the daughter of Lord Ochiltree, who at that period resided at Ochiltree House, now the mansion of the Dowager Lady Boswell. Ochiltree formerly gave a baron's title to a branch of the family of Stewart. The church, like most others in this part of the county, is a plain building. The Parochial and Free schools are well attended, and there is a subscription library well selected. Fairs are held on the second Wednesday in May, and the first Tuesday in November, for cattle.

SALTCOATS AND STEVENSTON.

SALTCOATS is a sea-port, partly in the parish of Stevenston and partly in that of Ardrossan; 74 miles W.S.S. from Edinburgh, 30 S.S.W. from Glasgow, 19 N. from Ayr, 14 W. by N. from Kilmarnock, and one from Ardrossan (to which latter there is a railway); eligibly situated on the Frith of Clyde, near to its northern extremity. The general appearance of the town is by no means prepossessing; but its situation and proximity to Ardrossan, and the passing and repassing of the different steam packets and railway carriages, all contribute to give life to this ancient place. Formerly Salt-cots was the name of this town, and it then consisted only of a small number of cots or cottages, the inhabitants of which obtained a livelihood by making salt. At the beginning of the last century, a harbour was constructed for the convenience of shipments of coal, the produce of the mines in this neighbourhood and the little hamlet began to assume the semblance of a village; but in recent years the entire exports of the neighbourhood are shipped at Ardrossan, leaving Saltcoats without any maritime trade. During the war it possessed an extensive trade, and ship-building was carried on with great spirit; but since the peace its commerce has been entirely reduced. The manufacture of salt is now considerable; many looms are employed in weaving muslins, &c., for the Glasgow and Paisley houses. The town-house, the foundation of which was laid in 1825, consists of a spacious hall, with two smaller apartments adjoining, and a lock-up for prisoners. The edifice, which is surmounted by a steeple, is a prominent and effective object when approaching the town. A justice court, for the recovery of small debts, sits here on the first Monday of each month. The Royal Bank of Scotland and the City of Glasgow Bank have branches in Saltcoats, and each occupy a handsome building. The places of worship comprise an Established Church, a Free Church, two for United Presbyterians, a Baptist meeting-house, a Gaelic Church, and one for Roman Catholics. The children of the town have the advantage of Free, Parochial, and Sabbath schools, and of a library of religious and moral works. There are several benefit societies, which alleviate the sufferings and relieve the necessities of the poor. A cattle and grain market is held every Thursday throughout the year, and an annual fair is held on the last Thursday in May.

STEVENSTON is a village one mile north-east from Saltcoats, and two south-west from Kilwinning. It consists chiefly of one street, half a mile in length, and derives its name from Stephen, or Steven, the son of Richard, who obtained a grant of lands from Richard Morville, constable of Scotland; the latter, a very celebrated man, died in 1189. Under this grant Steven settled here, and gave his patronimic designation to the place. The parish abounds with coal and freestone, of which large quantities are annually shipped. The dairy and agricultural produce, comprising cheese, butter, wheat, oats, and potatoes, is likewise of considerable value. A small portion of the inhabitants of the village are employed in weaving, and through the agents here the works of their looms are conveyed to the Glasgow houses. The present church is a neat and handsome building, of modern erection. The old church belonged formerly to the monks of Kilwinning.

STEWARTON, DUNLOP, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STEWARTON is a parish in the district of Cunningham—the town, one of manufacturers, is 16 miles s. by w. from Glasgow, 8 N. from Irvine, 5 N. from Kilmarnock, and 3 from Fenwick; situated in a pleasant part of the county, on the bank of the water of Annock. The parish, which is about ten miles in length, and varying from three to four in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, highly cultivated and improved, and adorned by several tastefully laid out seats of the gentry. For centuries Stewarton remained an inconsiderable and obscure village, and it is only of a comparatively recent date, that, owing to the general extension of trade and manufactures, it has considerably increased in size. The manufacture of carpets, which was very considerable some years ago, has greatly declined, there being only one factory now in operation. The manufacture or forging of clock-work forms an item in the trade of this town; and two woollen mills are engaged in carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades. A large portion of the population consists of shoemakers and weavers, who are employed by the Glasgow and Paisley establishments, through resident agents: linens and damasks are also issued from the Stewarton loom to some extent, and in the ingenious pursuit of 'Ayrshire needlework,' not fewer than four hundred females are engaged. The staple articles of manufacture, however, are Scotch bonnets and military forage caps, in which branches there are about ten employers; the most extensive firm being that of Robt. Mackie and Company. Ample banking accommodation is also afforded the town and neighbourhood by the Clydesdale Banking Company, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, having each a branch, under able and efficient management. The invention of 'portable bee boxes' by a Mr. Kerr, of this town, has proved a great advantage in the management of bees: these boxes are so constructed as to prevent 'swarming,' and to produce a very superior honey and comb; it obtains a much higher price in the markets than any other kind, and is known by the name of 'Stewarton honey.' District courts are held on the first Thursday of each month, for the recovery of small debts, and such business as falls under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the parishes of Stewarton, Dunlop, and Fenwick. It is also a polling station for the parishes of Stewarton, Fenwick, and Kilmaurs, returning a member to parliament for the county. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, and for United Presbyterians and Independents; there are Free church, parochial, and United Presbyterian schools, and some private academies. The market is held on Thursday. Fairs on the Thursday next before the first Friday in January (o.s.), for horses, cattle, and farm and dairy produce; on the Monday preceding the first Thursday in May, for the like commodities, and for stock and agricultural and dairy utensils, also for hiring servants; and on the Wednesday before the last Thursday in October, for fat cattle, horses, and farm and dairy produce, also for hiring servants.

DUNLOP is a village, two miles and a half from Stewarton, seated romantically on the banks of the Swinsy, about three hundred yards of the road leading from Kilmarnock to Paisley; and when seen from a little distance, through the trees which embosom it, it has an agreeable and retired appearance. The houses being mostly old, and the street narrow, it does not improve on a nearer view, though in this respect it does not suffer by comparison with other places of similar rank throughout the country. A new and handsome church erected in 1835, is ornamental to the neighbourhood; its predecessor suffered much from the combined effects of age and weather. In the churchyard is a small arched chamber, formed under the direction of Lord Viscount Clanaboyes, in 1641, over the grave of his father, the Rev. Hans Hamilton, who, for forty-one years was minister of the parish; it contains a well executed monument in marble, justly deserving attention: a schoolhouse was also built by the same nobleman, in the wall of which, is a stone bearing the above date, and an inscription, stating amongst other particulars, that it was erected and endowed by him 'in love of his parish in King James the Sixt his Raigne'; although in excellent preservation, it has long ceased to be occupied as an educational establishment, and is now the residence of a shoemaker; at the present time, there are two excellent schools—one a parochial, and the other belonging to the Free church. The parish, to which the village gives name, lies principally in the bailery of Cunningham, and county of Ayr; but on the north, it extends into Renfrewshire. It has long been noted for the excellent quality of its cheese, which bears a high character throughout Scotland. About the close of the seventeenth century, one Barbara Gilmour is said to have commenced the practice of making cheese from the entire milk, nothing but skimmed milk having been used in the process, in this district previous to that period; at present all the cheese similarly made in the western counties receives the appellation of 'Dunlop,' a large quantity is made here annually. There is also a considerable trade in meal carried on by the inhabitants of the village, and surrounding territory Dunlop House, in this parish, the seat of Thomas Dunlop Douglas, Esq., is one of handsomest mansions in the county; on this estate, resting on a small knoll, is a stone of large dimensions, called the 'O'Great Stone,' supposed to have been employed in some ancient rites of worship. Two fairs for the sale of dairy stock, are held—one about the middle of May, the other on the 12th of November; both are generally well attended.

STRAITON AND PATNA.

STRAITON is a parish, in Carrick district—the village, a neat one, is 80 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 26s. from Kilmarnock, 14 S.E. from Ayr, the same distance N.E. from Girvan, 8 E.S.E from Maybole, the same distance N.E. from Dailly, and 6 S.W. from Dalmellington; finely situated on the banks of the Girvan, and on the road leading from Glasgow to Newton-Stewart—48 miles S. by W. from the former, and 30 N. from the latter town. The parish, which extends about fifteen miles in length by five in breadth, consists for the most part of pasture land, the surface, especially in the south-east, being wild and rocky, interspersed with a number of small lakes; there is, however, a considerable supply of natural wood, and several extensive plantations; and besides the Girvan and lakes, it is watered by the Doon. The inhabitants are for the most part occupied in agricultural pursuits, a few at a neighbouring tile works, and some find employment in weaving. About half a mile south of the village are the vestiges of an oblong entrenchment, from which an extensive view is commanded; about this spot, the artificial work on which must be presumed to be of Roman origin, various ancient relics have been found, particularly two carved vases, or urns, containing ashes. The Marquess of Ailsa, the Honble. Colonel F. M. Cathcart, Sir Edward Ferguson, and Sir Hunter Blair are the proprietors of the land. Straiton has a neat parish church, a parochial school, and a female school, the latter built at the expense of, and principally maintained by, Lady H. Blair.

PATNA is a small village, in the parish of Straiton, situated on the banks of the Doon, which abounds with trout. Lime and coal are obtained plentifully in this neighbourhood, and furnishes employment to many of the villagers. The Honble. Mrs. Leslie is proprietress of the land about here. A chapel and school, in connexion with the Established Church, and the Relief Body, have a place of worship.

TARBOLTON, FAILFORD, STAIR AND JOPPA.

TARBOLTON is a parish in the district of Kyle—the village (or town) is 12 miles S.E. from Irvine, 8 S. from Kilmarnock, and 7 N.E. from Ayr, situated about five miles from the shore of the Frith of Clyde, surrounded by a fine country, and occupying a considerable space of ground. In the reign of the second Charles, it was erected into a burgh of barony, and granted to John Cunningham, Esq of Enterkine. The parish church is rather an elegant structure (with a beautiful spire, surmounted by a clock having four dials); it was completed in 1821, at a cost of upwards of £2,500. The parish is about seven and a half miles in length, and its average breadth about four and a half. The Duke of Portland, John Bell, Esq. — Hunter, Esq. of Blairquhan, Hugh Hamilton, Esq. of Pinmore, James Campbell, Esq. of Craigie, Colonel Neil, of Swinridge Muir, and William Orr Paterson Montgomery, are the principal heritors. The fairs are held on the first Monday in May, the first Tuesday after the 11th of June, and the first Wednesday in November.

The village of STAIR, which comprises but a few dwellings and a neat parish church, is about two miles and a half from Tarbolton: its situation is most romantic, and many highly ornamental mansions add to the beauty of the surrounding country. The neighbourhood abounds with mines of coal. The earldom of Stair is now merged in that of Dumfries.

JOPPA is a village, in the parish of Coylston, about 7 miles S.W. from Tarbolton. The parish, which is adjacent to the west border of Kyle district, is about five miles in length, by two in breadth. The church, erected in 1833, is a handsome building with accommodation for a congregation of more than seven hundred persons.

The parish of STAIR is in the district of Kyle, lying on the south or right bank of the river Ayr, and extending six miles in length, by about two in breadth; it was first erected into an independent parish in 1653, when it was severed from Ochiltree for the accommodation of the noble family of Dalrymple, of Stair.

TROON, DUNDONALD, AND SYMINGTON.

TROON, an excellent and improving sea-port, in the parish of Dundonald; is situated 75 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 31 s.w. from Glasgow, 7 s. from Irvine, and 9 s.w. from Kilmarnock—to which latter town there is a railway. Under the patronage of His Grace the Duke of Portland, this place has advanced steadily to a degree of eminence, and bids fair to become one of the most important sea-ports on the west coast of Scotland. Possessing uncommon natural advantages, in having an extensive bay, and a secure harbour, into which vessels of great burthen can confidently enter with the wind from almost any point. Troon is obviously destined to attain a high rank in maritime estimation. It has two superior dry docks for repairing vessels, large storehouses, a lighthouse, a ship-building yard, and a rope and sail manufactory. From the extremity of the harbour directly to Kilmarnock, runs a railway, on which, immense quantities of coal are conveyed from the neighbourhood of the latter town, and from hence shipped for Ireland, France, &c. The town is progressively enlarging, and, in addition to the prosperity derived from its commerce as a port, it enjoys the advantage of being visited, in the bathing season, by numerous respectable families—for whose accommodation handsome lodging houses have been built. The 'Portland Arms Hotel' stands deservedly high in estimation, from its commodiousness, and excellent management by Mr. William Elliott. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church, and a chapel for United Presbyterians, and the public schools are a Parochial and Free church, and an auxiliary.

DUNDONALD is a parish on the sea coast, in the district of Carrick, extending eight miles along the shore, from the water of Irvine towards the south—the village, situated about four miles and a quarter from Troon (which is also in the parish), contains a church of the Establishment. Dundonald Castle is a ruin of great celebrity, and occupies an elevated and commanding situation, within a mile of the sea.

SYMINGTON parish is in Kyle district, bounded by Monkton on the south, and Dundonald on the north—the village being about two miles from the latter, where is the parish church. The lands in this district were held, at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stewart, by Symon Loccard, from whom the place originally obtained the name which it bears at the present day.

WEST KILBRIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

WEST KILBRIDE is a parish, in the district of Cunningham—the village is 73 miles W.S.W. from Edinburgh, 30 S.W. from Glasgow, 24 S.S.W. from Paisley, the like distance N. from Ayr, 22 S. from Greenock, 19 N.W. from Kilmarnock, 12 N. from Irvine, 7½ S. from Largs, 7 S.W. from Dalry, 5 N. from Saltcoats, the same distance S. from Fairlie, and 4 N.W. from Ardrossan; surrounded on all sides by rising grounds, which on the west protect it from the keen sea breezes, and on the opposite aspect from easterly winds. The scenery around is bold and romantic, interspersed with a few genteel and handsome residences. The ruins of Law Castle and Porten Cross are in the immediate vicinity of the village, and are both objects of interest to the curious in architectural relics. The town, or village, seems to be making but very slow progress in the march of improvement, the chief discernable advance being, that it is now lighted with gas. A branch of the City of Glasgow Bank has recently been established here. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving, in which about one hundred and forty looms are engaged. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel. The parochial school, a most useful institution, affords education upon very moderate terms to those who are enabled to pay, and gratuitously to such as are not blessed with the means of doing so. There is an excellent school also connected with the Free Church, and the village supports a considerable library. The parish extends six miles along the shore of the Frith of Clyde, and inland from two to three miles. The district, independent of the ruins already mentioned, possesses other attractive vestiges of antiquity; and it is worthy of remark that, off the sea line of the parish, one of the largest vessels composing the Spanish Armada remains sunk in ten fathoms water: an attempt was made about a century ago, to examine the internal condition of this ship, and the operation succeeded so far that a piece of ordnance was raised from her hulk.

BANFFSHIRE.

THIS county, which is one of no great extent, is bounded on the north by the Frith of Moray, on the south and on the east by Aberdeenshire, and on the west by the shires of Moray and Inverness. Its form is elongated—irregularly concave towards its south-eastern border, and convex on its north-eastern, with a slip or apex inserted between the counties of Moray and Aberdeen. In breadth, at its widest part, it is about twenty miles, and its extreme length fifty; it diminishes to an apex (as before stated) at the extreme western end, but the base on the coast extends twenty-five miles. The course of the Deveron, for a considerable distance, forms the eastern boundary between this county and that of Aberdeen; and the Spey, with little impropriety, may be accounted its western limit with Morayshire. This district was at one time a component part of the large province of Moray, which altogether forms one of the finest tracts of ground in the northern part of Scotland. On the eastern side of the Deveron, in the district of Buchan, the parish of Gamrie, and some other spots of land, belong to Banffshire; so that, in all, the county presents a superficies of somewhat above one thousand square miles.

SOIL, SURFACE and CLIMATE, PRODUCE and MANUFACTURES.—The soil, with few exceptions, is deep loam or tenacious clay. The face of the county is agreeably diversified by an intermixture of valleys and flat ground, among the ranges of hills, with many beautiful fertile braes, productive of the finest crops, or serviceable for the excellence of their green pasture. The Strath of Glen-Avon proceeds from the forest of Glen-Avon, in a north-easterly direction, or on the left, and Strath Deveron on the right. Betwixt these is Glen-Livet, from whence, in a north-easterly direction, diverges Glen-Feddick. The principal eminences in the county are—Noath, 1,830; Buck, or Cabrach, 2,377: Knockhill, 2,500; Corryhabbie, 2,558; Belrinnes, 2,747; and Cairngorm, 4,244 feet above the level of the sea. The principal crops raised are barley, oats, turnips, potatoes, flax, grass, and, in some places, a small extent of pease. Under the auspices of parliamentary commissioners, the county has experienced considerable improvement, and been opened by new roads. Limestone may be quarried beneath the surface of nearly the whole county; and at Portsoy is a fine vein of serpentine stone, called 'Portsoy marble,' as well as a species of granite, which, when polished, exhibits the resemblance of Hebrew characters. Freestone, marl, and slate are also found in various parts. The first MANUFACTURE introduced into this district still subsists, with an almost equal operation throughout the county—this is the spinning of flax, for the merchants of Glasgow, Paisley, Dundee, and Aberdeen; the manufacture of thread, both white and dyed, is also carried on, but not very extensively. The curing of fish is a branch of some consequence in the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Portsoy; and there are distilleries in several of the principal towns. The chief articles of export are black cattle, oats, salted or dried cod, ling, haddock, and skate; the salmon of the Spey and Deveron, put together, are also an article of great consideration. The imports may be, in general, comprised under the necessaries and luxuries of life, not produced in the county. The CLIMATE of Banffshire is precarious. In the hilly districts, all the evils of cold and rain are often felt; and as frosts and snows frequently set in without any interval of good weather, the harvests are not only endangered, but the operations of husbandry are suspended for many of the winter months. The lower part of the shire, from Duff-house to Forglen and Kinnairdy (a tract of about twelve miles along the river side), and from Banff to Gordon Castle, including the districts of Boyne and Enzie, must be excepted, being nearly equal to the climate of Moray, and greatly surpassing the most part of the county in the fertility of the soil, the improvement of its agriculture, and the richness of its productions.

RIVERS, &c.—The waters of this county are the SPEY, the LIVET, the AVON, the FEDDICK, the DEVERON, the ISLA, the CONGLAS, and several more minute streams. The Deveron is not navigable; but this, as well as the Spey, yields excellent salmon fishing, and as such is the source of much comfort and wealth to the inhabitants. Along the coast there are a number of rivulets, which fall with a quick descent, and are useful in propelling machinery in different little towns and villages where manufactures are established, or have begun to make their appearance.

Banffshire comprehends twenty-eight parishes, or parts of parishes, some extending into, and others locally situate in, other counties; and it contains two royal burghs, BANFF and CULLEN: these are also contributory burghs, or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the senate. One member represents the shire at large.

BANFF

IS a burgh of barony, the capital of the county and of the parish of its name, 155 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, 80 E. of Inverness, 46 N. by W. of Aberdeen, 35 E. of Elgin, 25 E. by N. of Fochabers, 13 E. of Cullen, and 8 E. by S. of Portsoy: pleasantly situate on the side of a hill overlooking the west bank of the Deveron and its confluence with the sea. This town was part of the ancient thanedom of Boin, whence the name seems to be derived—for, in some old charters, it is written Boineffe and Baineffe. Tradition says it was founded by Malcolm Canmore, in 1163; and it was erected into a royal burgh in 1372, by Robert II, who endowed it with the same privileges, and placed it on the same footing as Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, and five councillors. Banff, in conjunction with Cullen, Elgin, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, returns one member to parliament; the gentleman at present sitting is Mountstewart Elphinstone Grant Duff, Esq., of Eden.

The town comprises several well-built streets, with handsome shops, and is remarkably clean and neat. The principal street, which is handsome, is ornamented with a suitable modern town-house, surmounted by an elegant spire; and there are public baths, a museum, a reading-room, and libraries. A newspaper, with a a large circulation, is published in the town. The town has recently been very much opened to the tourist and to men of business, as two railways have been made to it—one from the south by way of Turriff, the other, the Inverness and Aberdeen line from the north, passing through Keith. Steamers to and from the North and London and Leith, call regularly off the town. The burgh boasts one of the finest hotels in the north. Coaches arrive and depart daily for Elgin and Peterhead.

The river Deveron, which abounds with salmon, is here crossed by a substantially constructed bridge of seven arches, which gives access to the seaport of MACDUFF. From the bridge a fine view is obtained on looking up the water, of Duff House, the seat of the Earl of Fife, rising out of a beautiful park, surrounded by an apparently interminable wilderness of trees, which together are said to comprise a circumference of fourteen miles. The elegant mansion is partly in the Corinthian and partly in the composite style of architecture, and the front is elaborately decorated with sculpture. The interior is replete with curiosities, and embellished with an extensive collection of paintings by the most celebrated foreign and British artists.

The inner harbour of Banff is secure, but has not a great depth of water. The outer basin, which is defended by a pier and breakwater, is likewise deficient in depth, except at the entrance; it has however of late been much improved and deepened. A Morton's patent slip apparatus is here fitted up, and is frequently in operation. The number of vessels from the port of Banff is 29; the aggregate burden of which is about 4,300 tons. The chief trade, of an export nature, comprises salmon, herring, and other fish. Some of the largest firms in the herring trade have the chief seat of their business in the burgh, in which there are six branch banks. There is a custom house, and the merchants enjoy the privilege of a bonded warehouse. There is a large distillery, besides a brewery, and an extensive sawmill. An iron foundry has long been carried on, and does an extensive business. Shipbuilding, rope and sail making, are also carried on to a considerable extent; and there are besides a candle works and a tannery. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a neat modern erection, with handsome spire; a Free church, and chapels belonging to Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Independents, Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, &c. Banff academy ranks high as an educational institution; and, independent of other superior scholastic establishments there are charity schools for children of the humbler classes. There are also several boarding establishments for young ladies, so that few burghs offer greater educational facilities. A castle of considerable strength and magnitude formerly raised its feudal battlements in the burgh; but, of all that might convey a conception of its grandeur or importance, no vestige remains but part of the ancient wall, the moat, and traces of the entrenchments; a modern mansion now occupies part of its site. The society of the place is polished and agreeable, while the size and position of the town places within reach of its inhabitants all the comforts of city, with most of the privileges of rural life. The weekly corn and provision markets are held on Friday. Fairs,—Brandon fair on the Friday before the 26th May, or the 26th if a Friday, and on the Friday before the 22nd of November, or the 22nd if a Friday; the harvest feeing market on the first Friday of August, old style.

BUCKIE, RATHVEN, PORT GORDON, PORTEASIE,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BUCKIE is a village, or small town, and flourishing fishing station, in the parish of Rathven, 20 miles w. from Banff, 7 E. from Fochabers, and 6 w. from Cullen, situated on both sides of the burn (or brook) of Buckie; one part belonging to Colonel Gordon, of Clunie, the other to Sir William Gordon, of Letterfourie. The inhabitants are mainly engaged in fishing, and are famed throughout Scotland for their industry, and hardihood in braving the perils of their avocation; as a natural consequence, their services are eagerly sought at the several herring-fishing stations on the Moray Frith. The only harbour is a small basin excavated out of the rocky shore, and sheltered by a slight timber breakwater. The places of worship are the parish church, a chapel of ease, an Episcopal chapel, and a Free church —the latter, a handsome building, in the Elizabethian style, was erected chiefly through the praiseworthy instrumentality of the Rev. Robert Shanks, its respected minister.

PORT GORDON is a village on the sea coast, about a mile west from Buckie. Its inhabitants are exclusively occupied in fishing and the ship coasting trade; they employ stake and bag nets for the capture of salmon, which are here abundant, being in the immediate vicinage of Speymouth. A large quantity of corn is shipped annually from this port, and it is hence that the district, to a considerable extent inland, is supplied with coals and salt. A narrow rivulet separates this village from that of PORT TANNACHIE.

PORTEASIE (or Portessie), is a small coast village, about a mile east from Buckie, it is of some consequence as a boat-building station.

The parish of RATHVEN extends about 10 miles along the coast of the Moray Frith, by from 3 to 5 in breadth. The greater portion of the land is hill, moss, and moor, but the more level parts, near the sea, are arable and fertile, being greatly enriched by sea manure; and in some parts the eye is relieved by the appearance of thriving plantations. Throughout the district the supply of limestone, sandstone, and slate is abundant; and the memorials of antiquity are numerous, the Danish 'cairn' being the most general.

CULLEN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

CULLEN is a royal burgh, a maratime town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 191 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh, 22 E. of Elgin, 13 N.E. of Fochabers, 14 W. of Banff, and 6 W. of Portsoy; situated on a commanding eminence, overlooking the Moray Frith. Until within the last forty years it consisted of three independent and distinct towns—the NEW TOWN, near the sea, with a harbour; the AULD TOWN, more inland, and adjoining to the parks of Cullen House; and the FISH TOWN, a low village, exclusively inhabited by fishermen and their families. The Auld Town no longer exists, and the park of the Earl of Seafield occupies its site. To this nobleman the town is indebted for those improvements and modern erections which have conferred upon it that aspect of neatness and respectability so apparent, and raised it to the rank of the third town in the shire. The curing of fish and its exportation is carried on by several of the inhabitants. Besides these occupations, a branch of the Union Banking Company, six insurance companies' agents, and a good inn, are the principal establishments.

The acting magistrates are the provost, three bailies, with a treasurer, dean of guild, and thirteen councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Elgin, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning a member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Mountstewart Elphinstone Grant Duff, Esq.

A very elegant temple of stone was some years since erected upon an elevated spot of ground, very near the sea, and not far from Cullen House. This latter is an ancient and irregular edifice; the interior is, however, furnished with modern taste, and adorned with paintings by the most eminent masters. Cullen stream passes under the south walls; and on the opposite side are the park and pleasure-grounds, which are connected with the house by an elegant arch of eighty-four feet span. Not far distant are the ruins of a dwelling in which Elizabeth, queen of Robert Bruce, is said to have died. An eminence, called Castle Hill, at the western extremity of the town, is the site of an ancient fortification, which must formerly have been a place of great strength. An almost perpendicular rock renders it inaccessible from the north, and it is surrounded in every other direction by a deep ditch. It is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, as vitrified stones have been frequently extracted from beneath the surface. Fairs are held on the 7th January, the third Friday in May, and second Friday in November (new style).

DUFFTOWN IN MORTLACH.

ABERLOUR, CHARLESTOWN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUFFTOWN is a village of modern date (having been erected within the last five and forty years), in the parish of Mortlach; 118 miles N. of Edinburgh, 49 N.W. of Aberdeen, 29 S.W. of Banff, 14 N. E. of Inveraven, and 4 S. of Aberlour; situated a short way to the north of the old decayed hamlet of Mortlach, near the junction of the Dullan and the Fiddich waters. The village is rapidly improving in appearance, extent, and population, under the auspices of its patrons and owners, the Earl of Fife and the Duke of Richmond. This parish is famous as the scene of the signal victory victory gained over the Danes by Malcolm II; and the district possesses the ruins of the castles of Auchendoun and Balnevy, of which Mr. Gordon, in his 'Statistical Account of Scotland,' says—'When a stranger is travelling through this part of Scotland for curiosity or pleasure, they deserve his attention, and will contribute to his amusement. Excellent accomodation may be obtained at the Fife Arms, and Websters Hotel, both of which are well conducted establishments, the former is also a posting house. The parish church is in the immediate vicinity of the village, which also contains a free church and a neat Roman Catholic chapel. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in January, the first Wednesday in April, the Monday before first Tuesday in June (old style); the second Thursday in July, the third Thursday in August, and third Thursday in December (new style).

About four miles distant from Dufftown, in the parish of ABERLOUR is the pleasant and thriving village of CHARLESTOWN. It contains a Church of the Establishment, and a Free Church. The Aberlour Hotel is an excellent commercial, family and posting establishment. The fairs are held on the first Tuesday in April, Thursday before the twenty sixth of May, third Thursday of July, second Thursday of August, and second Thursday of November.

INVERAVEN,

A PARISH on the banks of the river Avon, lies chiefly in Banffshire, and a small portion in the county of Moray: about 42 miles s. w. of Banff, 72 w.n.w. of Aberdeen, 8 s. w. of Aberlour, 22 s. w. of Keith, 14 s. of Rothes, 22 s. by w. of Fochabers, and 22 s. of Elgin. Besides the Avon and the Spey, it is watered by the Livet. The surface is irregular, but cannot be described as mountainous, except the lofty region of Belrinnes, which is mostly in this parish, and abounds in grouse. The district of GLEN-LIVET is remarkably fertile, and noted for the excellence of its whisky, for the manufacture of which there are two extensive distilleries. The sides of the river are shaded with copses of birch and alder, and on the banks of the Spey there is a considerable extent of oak. Ballindalloch, the elegant mansion of Sir George M'Pherson Grant, Bart. is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Aven and Spey. A dilapidated castle, called Drummin, and the ruins of Castletown, are among the remains of antiquity. A church of the establishment, a chapel of ease, a Free church, and a Roman Catholic chapel, are the places of worship within the parish. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before the 26th of May, and the second Tuesday in July (old style); and another on the Tuesday before the 23rd of November.

POST OFFICE, James Burgess, Post Master,—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at five minutes to five, and night at eight, and are despatched every morning at five minutes to five, and night at eight,

KEITH AND BOTRIPHNIE.

A RESPECTABLE market and post town and parish—the latter chiefly in the county of Banff, and extends into that of Moray—the town is 170 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 s.w. of Banff, 17 E.S.E. of Elgin, 50 N.E. of Aberdeen, 60 E of Inverness, 8 S.E. of Fochabers, 17 S.S.W. of Portsoy, and 12 s. of Cullen; situate on the banks of the Isla, in the centre of an amphitheatre of hills. It is divided into three distinct towns, namely, Old Keith, New Keith, and Fife Keith; the latter, erected by the Earl of Fife, is separated from Old and New Keith by the Isla. The old town has declined considerably since the establishment of the new: New Keith was begun about the year 1750, by the Earl of Findlater, upon a barren tract of land, feued off in tenements of fifteen yards by sixty; it is formed on a regular plan of three parallel streets and a square; in the latter are held the fairs and the weekly markets. There are no authentic documents to record the origin of Old Keith, but it has certainly existed upwards of six centuries. About half a mile from the town, on the banks of the Isla, is a wool-carding mill; and in the neighbourhood are corn mills—one of the latter, built upon an improved plan, and under the patronage of the Earl of Fife, occupies the site of the old mill, which was known as the mill of Keith.' Three branches of the respective establishments of the 'Union Bank of Scotland,' the 'Aberdeen Town and County Bank,' and the 'North of Scotland Banking Company,' are in operation here; and besides the usual trades of a domestic nature, there are dye works, a tan-yard, and two good inns. On the Cairds' Hill, denoting the 'hill of friends,' are the remains of a druidical temple, near which several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain various sepulchral remains. Tradition relates that an encounter took place in Old Keith, upwards of one hundred and fifty years ago, between Mr. Gordon, of Glengarick, and Peter Roy M'Gregor, the leader of a band of freebooters, who after a desperate resistance, was defeated, himself taken prisoner, and his gang destroyed. A new church of the establishment was opened for public worship in 1819; it is an elegant and commodious edifice, in the neat modern Gothic style of architecture, with accommodation for a congregation of eighteen hundred, it is considered the most beautiful temple for religious service in the north of Scotland. The Episcopalians, Seceders, a Free church community, and Roman Catholics, have each a place of worship. The inhabitants have the advantage of four libraries, namely, two of evangelical subjects, a subscription library, and a juvenile collection. The market is held on Friday. There are four extra markets during the year—the first Thursday of March, the third Thursday of May, the second Thursday of July, and the second Thursday of October.

BOTRIPHNIE—a parish in Banffshire, and the seat of a presbytery—is situated about four miles south of Keith town: it extends across the whole county, from Aberdeenshire on the east, to Elginshire on the west, having an average breadth of about three miles: the soil for the most part is arable and generally speaking fertile.

POST OFFICE, Land street, Barbara Keith, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from parts SOUTH every morning at ten minutes past eleven, and in the afternoon at seventeen minutes past four, and despatched at thirty-five minutes past eight in the morning.

Letters arrive from parts NORTH at twenty minutes past nine in the morning, and are despatched at half-past ten, and in the afternoon at thirty-five minutes past three.

Money Order Office from nine in the morning till six in the evening.

MACDUFF AND GAMRIE.

MACDUFF is a sea-port town in the parish of Gamrie, situated about a mile east from the town of Banff, on the opposite side of the Deveron river, and on the declivity of a hill descending towards the sea shore. This town has risen, since the early part of the eighteenth century, from being little more than the huttage of a few fishermen, to a place of respectable size and trade. It is built on the property of the Earl of Fife, whose fine seat lies in this neighbourhood; and to this nobleman it has been indebted for its chief improvements and prosperity; through his influence, it was created a burgh of barony by George III., in 1783, when its name was altered from Doon, to its present appellation; it has from that period increased rapidly in extent and consequence; contains a handsome church, a parochial school, and a school for poor children of both sexes—the latter, called the 'Murray Institution,' from its having been founded by a Mr. Murray, of London, a canvass manufacturer, and a native of Macduff, in 1849: there is also a town house and gaol.

The church, or rather chapel-of-ease, occupies a conspicuous position on the eminence; and Lord Fife has ornamented his precincts with a cross, which is highly effective at a little distance. The same nobleman has munificently expended a vast sum in the erection and improvement of the harbour, which is now considered one of the best on the Moray Frith; as a station of the herring fishery, it is exceedingly valuable, a greater supply of that fish being obtained and shipped from this port than from any other between Fraserburgh and Cromarty. There are two branch banking establishments—the Union Bank of Scotland, and the North of Scotland Banking Co. The greater proportion of the grain produced for twenty miles east of Macduff, is exported hence, as are salmon, cod, and herring; and the country inland, is supplied with coal, bone-manure, and lime, imported here. Several vessels trade with London, and the Baltic, the number of fishing boats is very considerable, and in the curing of fish there are some respectable establishments, and many of the inhabitants obtain in this branch comfortable and even lucrative employment. The town is governed by a provost, bailies, and council; and it has a weekly market on Tuesday.

The parish of GAMRIE extends about eleven miles, by an average breadth of about two and a half. The coast is bold and precipitous, and indented with caverns. The land is partly under tillage, and partly in pasture. Thriving plantations greet the eye in several quarters, and other beneficial improvements are in progress in this parish, the greater part of which belongs to the Earl of Fife.

POST OFFICE, MACDUFF, George Edward, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from BANFF) every afternoon at half-past one, and evening at seven, and are despatched thereto, every morning at fifteen minutes past eleven, and afternoon at a quarter to six, and night at nine.

PORTSOY AND FORDYCE.

PORTSOY is a sea-port in the parish of Fordyce; 178 miles N. of Edinburgh, 82 E. by N. of Inverness, 18 E.N.E. of Fochabers, and 8 W. by N. of Banff, situated on a tongue of land projecting into the Moray Frith, at the head of one of those little bays by which this part of the coast is in many places indented. It was erected into a burgh of barony about the sixteenth century, by the Baron of Boyne, whose descendants, embracing the fortunes of the pretender, in 1715, forfeited their lands to the crown. They were subsequently granted to the Earl of Findlater and Seafield, and are still in the possession of that family. The town is small and irregularly built, but as a port, it is in a thriving condition. The point of land on which it stands forms a safe harbour, which has been greatly improved; and it is now sufficiently deep to moor vessels of upwards of two hundred tons burthen. Besides the proceeds of the herring fishery, which has been actively prosecuted for many years, it enjoys a trade in the exportation of grain and stone, and the importation of coal; fish-curing, a woollen manufactory, are prominent branches among the general domestic business, which, combined with the income resulting from the traffic of its port, has elevated Portsoy into a position of some consequence as a commercial town. The stone raised from the quarters of this district (which has obtained the name of 'Portsoy marble') is a beautiful mixture of red, green, and white accumulations, and is wrought into tea-cups, vases, and small ornaments, but not frequently into chimney-pieces, being found too hard and brittle for that purpose. Some singular specimens of schistus, and a species of asbestos of a greenish hue, are met with in this neighbourhood; but the most remarkable mineral production is a granite, of a buff or flesh colour, which, except here and in Arabia, has not been discovered throughout the world. The export of these different natural rareties is considerable, and adds to the inflowing wealth of the district, which likewise abounds with excellent limestone. The burgh is under the jurisdiction of a baron baillie and a justice of the peace; the Earl of Seafield is superior. The places of worship are a Church of the Establishment, a Free Church, an Independent Chapel, an Episcopal Chapel, and one for Roman Catholics.

The parish of FORDYCE is of great antiquity. The village is situated about three miles W. by S. from Portsoy; and owns at the present day some celebrity from its educational institutions. Smith's academy is a handsome modern building, in which nine boys are educated and clothed. The parochial school is admirably conducted. It was in this latter establishment that Sir James Clark, Bart., physician in ordinary to Her Majesty, and John Forbes, Esq. physician extraordinary to H. R. H. Prince Albert, received the early part of their education. The most remarkable remnant of antiquity in the village, is a large castellated building, standing on the east side of the square, and bearing the date of 1592; it originally belonged to the Durn family, but is now the property of Lord Seafield.

POST OFFICE, High street, PORTSOY, Margaret Watson, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from WEST and NORTH at twenty minutes past eleven forenoon; from BANFF, and the SOUTH at twenty-five minutes past one in the afternoon; from CULLEN and the SOUTH at twelve noon; and are despatched to BANFF at ten minutes past eleven in the forenoon; to the NORTH and WEST at ten minutes past one in the afternoon; to CULLEN and the SOUTH at eight in the evening.

Money Order Office open from ten in the morning till six in the evening.

POST OFFICE, FORDYCE, John M'Beath, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from PORTSOY) at nine in the morning, and are despatched thereto at forty-five minutes past twelve at noon.

BERWICKSHIRE.

THIS is the most south-easterly county of Scotland: it is bounded on the east by the North Sea, and on the west by the counties of Edinburgh and Selkirk; on the north the range of Lammermuir hills separate it from the county of Haddington, and on the south it is bordered by Northumberland and Roxburghshire, having a detached portion of the county of Durham upon its south-eastern limits. Its form is an irregular oblong square, measuring from east to west nearly thirty-four miles, and from north to south about twenty; and its area comprehends four hundred and forty-two square miles, or 282,880 statute acres.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the period of the Roman invasion, Berwickshire was inhabited by tribes of British, called Ottadinii; and it was subsequently overrun by bands of Saxons, who engrafted their language and manners on those of the original inhabitants. The conquests of these foreigners extended a considerable way along the shores to the east and west; and, in the course of time, they gave the land of which they thus possessed themselves the title of Lothian, which it still retains in the western division. The entire area of Berwickshire was comprised in this Saxon territory, which was distinguished by the name of Saxonia, superseding its previous designation, Bernicia. Until the year 1020, this district of country was included within the kingdom of Northumberland; in that year it was ceded to King Malcolm II. by Cospatrick, Earl of Northumberland, who settled in Scotland, and was created Earl of Dunbar. About the beginning of the eleventh century, many Norman and Anglo-Saxon families settled in Berwickshire, as well as in other parts of Scotland, and were the founders of a number of noble houses still ranked in the peerage of the country. It appears, likewise, that the town of Berwick became a settlement of Flemish and other foreign tradesmen; and it is recorded as a fact, that at Berwick originated those laws which were framed and applied in Scotland for the regulation of burghs and their guild associations. Being the threshold of the Scottish kingdom in entering from England, Berwickshire suffered, in the succeeding centuries, in all the wars between the two hostile nations, and was occasionally involved in jurisdictional disputes with its ecclesiastical neighbour, the Palatine Bishop of Durham; and Berwick, and its bridge across the Tweed, were in general the main objects of contention. The description of Berwick will be found under the more appropriate head of that town. From the variety of successes and disasters which Berwickshire underwent for so many centuries, and from its successive occupation by different mixed nations, the people of this part of North Britain have not that distinct Scottish character so directly recognised in places more distant from the frontier. By their language and personal appearance, especially the former, the inhabitants of Berwick and its neighbourhood are easily particularized, and in common with the Northumbrians, they speak with that remarkable burr which is found nowhere else in the kingdom. The women are famed for their beauty—the men for their gallant bearing in times of warlike strife. The 'Men of Merse' distinguished themselves at Flodden, and other bloody fields, under the command of Lord Home; and there is a tradition that a party, led to the Holy Land by some of their feudal chiefs, obtained on its ensanguined plains the highest honours for their unconquerable intrepidity. When Charles I. paid his first visit to Scotland, in the year 1633, Lord Home met him at Berwick with a train of six hundred Merse gentlemen, 'gallantly arrayed' on horseback. The present generation has seen that the yeomanry of the Merse have lost no portion of the military spirit of their ancestors.

SURFACE, SOIL, &c.—Berwickshire is divided into three districts, namely, Merse, Lammermoor (or Lammermuir), and Lauderdale. The Merse, so called from the word march, or boundary, is the largest and most valuable district, and occasionally gives name to the whole county; it is the most compact and extensive piece of level ground in Scotland, comprising about 130,000 statute acres; in appearance it resembles a wide-spread portion of some of the English fertile counties; and being well enclosed, and enriched with trees and plantations, when viewed from any of the gentle eminences which its surface occasionally presents, it looks like a vast garden. Lammermoor, which consists of nearly 90,000 statute acres, is a highly pastoral district, with generally a wild brown aspect, and runs on the northern border of the Merse, so as effectually to divide the fine vales of Edinburgh and Haddington shires from the beautiful valley of the Tweed: but for this chain of blackish obstructive hills, the prospect from Edinburgh would be carried the length of the Cheviots. The district of Lauderdale, which has received this title from the Leader Water, along whose bank it ranges, is a mixture of hill and dale, the land in the valleys being essentially arable: this portion of the county contains about 67,000 statute acres. The eminences of Berwickshire are not of such magnitude or interest as to require particular description: those of the greatest altitude above the level of the sea are—Soutra Hill, 1,716 feet; Crib Law, 1,615; Clint Hill, 1,544; Tippet Knows, 1,323; Twin Law, 1,260; and Dirrington Law, 1,145.

PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Within the last seventy years very great exertions have been made to improve the agricultural character of the county, and in this respect it differs nothing from the neighbouring territory of East Lothian: the country is thickly but not redundantly populated with a most intelligent active peasantry and farming class. The exports of Berwickshire consist of great quantities of corn, coal, sheep, and eggs; and these, indeed, may be considered as the extent of its commerce. Minute investigation has failed in discovering minerals or fossils in sufficient supply to be of great and general benefit, although some coal exists in the vicinity of Berwick, and in the parishes of Mordington and Cockburnspath; and limestone is, almost consequently, found in its proximity. Marl and gypsum have likewise been raised; and freestone and whinstone, of various kinds, abound in every part of the shire. As coal is introduced from Durham by an easy land carriage, the district of the Merse does not feel the absence of that valuable fuel very severely; but in some other parts of the shire, as throughout the upper portion of the vale of Tweed, this article is dear. Berwickshire is strictly pastoral and agricultural. Manufactures, as yet, have made little or no progress within its borders; what is connected with this system of industry finds its chief seat at the principal town, Berwick, where sackings, sailcloths and ropes are made, and flax dressed and spun. The curing of herrings in this quarter is a somewhat extensive occupation, and it is from hence that large shipments of corn, &c. are made.

Rivers and Railways.—The waters of this county flow in general either to the south or north-east. The Tweed, which is an imposing stream, and the most lovely of Scottish rivers, from its sparkling clearness and its soft sylvan banks, receives all the currents that are poured down from the northern eminences: it is not susceptible of navigation, but it is of great value from its salmon fisheries, which are under a strict system of water police. The Leader, the Eden, and the united streams of the Blackadder and the Whiteadder, course into the Tweed. The Eye is the only other river; it falls into the sea at Eyemouth. The Eden, which runs southwards from Lammermoor, has a remarkable fall, near the house of Newton Don, of above forty feet, exhibiting a fine appearance when there is a flood. It is a peculiarity of the Blackadder, that no salmon can live in it; if any happen to enter, they are said to die in a few days, though they are caught plentifully in the Whiteadder, which also abounds with trout and whitelings: these latter attain a larger size than the trout; their flesh is red, and in flavour bears a partial affinity to that of salmon. The principal railway in this county is the North British: this line enters at Berwick, and goes to Cockburnspath, Dunbar, Haddington, &c. to Edinburgh. From the North British there is the Dunse and Riston branch, communicating with Chirnside; and the Edinburgh branch, to Melrose and Hawick, passes about five miles to the west of Lauder. The northern extremity of the York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway is at Berwick; and here the magnificent Tweed viaduct connects that line with the North British, and forms, with other railways, an uninterrupted communication from London to Aberdeen.—[See the town of Berwick for a more detailed account of the viaduct.]

Division and Representation.—Berwickshire comprehends (exclusive of Berwick town) thirty-three parishes, and two parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, Lauder. The only contributory burgh (or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the senate), in this county, is Lauder; the others, representatively connected with it, are Haddington, Dunbar, and North Berwick, in Haddingtonshire, and Jedburgh in Roxburghshire. Berwick-upon-Tweed is a royal burgh, and sends two members; but is not classed as an integral portion of the county, which sends one for the shire at large.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, TWEEDMOUTH, SPITTAL,

ANCROFT, SCREMERSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

Berwick-upon-Tweed (so denominated to distinguish it from North Berwick, in East Lothian, and several Berwicks in England), is a corporate and parliamentary borough and sea-port, 334 miles N. by W. from London, 64 N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 49 N. from Morpeth; from the city of Edinburgh it is distant S. E. 59 miles, and from Glasgow E. by S. 103. It is a town of considerable importance, of Saxon or Teutonic origin. The etymology of its name is as doubtful as the period of its establishment is obscure. Maitland, the historian of Edinburgh, entered into a dissertation to prove that the title was transferred by the Saxon founders from a town of note, of the same name, in their own country—in the like manner as European emigrants designate cities and towns on the continent of America; others, and among the rest, Camden, allege that the word Berwick is deduced from Barwica, signifying 'a village belonging to a manor;' while a third party, with more feasibility, derive it from bar and wick, 'a castle on the bend of a river' But, in whatever manner, or from whom, Berwick received its appellation, it was fortified and defended by a garrison at a very remote period of British history; it became the chief town of the district, and was the centre, on various occasions, of many important transactions. It stands on the north side of the river Tweed, about half a mile from the spot where that stream empties itself into Berwick bay. Prior to the year 1551 it was a Scots town, but it was then erected into a free burgh or distinct liberty, in some measure independent of either kingdom—having a small district attached to it called 'Berwick bounds,' stretching about three miles north, and the like distance up the Tweed. It may be added, that it is described as a large and populous town, so early as the reign of David I., of Scotland—is mentioned as a place of redoubtable strength in the time of Osbert, one of the last kings of Northumberland—and is assumed to be the point where the Danes landed, in one of their excurtions under Hubba, in the year 867. It continued in the possession of the Saxons for some ages, and subsequently was held by the Danes, until the Scottish king Gregory (co-temporary with Alfred the Great) took it by assault. About the year 1098, Berwick was annexed to the see of Durham, by Edgar; but the gift was soon after resumed, in consequence of the ingratitude of Ralph Flambert, who had been consecrated bishop of that see. William I. of Scotland, who, in 1174, had joined Henry's three sons in rebellion, was taken prisoner near Alnwick, and conducted in chains before Henry, who obliged him to pay homage for the whole of Scotland; and, as a security, he was forced to deliver up the fort of Berwick, together with all the principal forts of Scotland. In 1291, the states of England and Scotland, with Edward I., assembled at Berwick, to determine the claims of Robert Bruce and John Baliol, to the Scottish crown, when, after numerous conferences, on the 17th of November, in the following year, the king appointed John Baliol successor to the crown. The town is surrounded by regular fortifications, and was formerly the principal one of the kingdom of Merse; it stands on a gentle declivity, at a short distance from the sea, its gates and walls are yet standing, but the cannon have for some time been removed to Leith; a ditch aided its defence on the north-east, and the river served for a moat on the south side; the ancient castle, of which there are only a few remains, must have been of great strength, and is now merely an attractive object to the antiquary. Berwick is a well-built town, and is connected with the south bank of the Tweed by a firmly constructed bridge of hewn stone, of fifteen spacious and elegant arches; the entire length of the bridge is 1,164 feet, and its width seventeen feet; at each of the pillars, which are fourteen in number, there is an outlet to both sides, for the greater safety of foot passengers when carriages, &c., approach in opposite directions; it was commenced in the reign of Elizabeth, but not completed until that of Charles I., and in those days, was computed to have cost £15,000: the sixth pillar, from the Berwick side, sparates that town from the county Palatine of Durham. About a quarter of a mile higher up the river is the railway viaduct, opened by her Majesty and Prince Albert, on the 29th August, 1850. This magnificent structure spans the broad valley of the Tweed at Berwick, and completes an important link in the chain of railway communication between London and Edinburgh, by the east coast. It forms the northern extremity of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway; and in magnitude of construction and grandeur of design, is, perhaps, one of the most remarkable architectural achievements of modern times. The foundation stone of this noble structure was laid on the 15th on May, 1847, without any public ceremony. The viaduct consists of twenty-eight circular arches, each of sixty-one feet six inches span, springing from lofty piers eight feet six inches broad at the narrowest point. One-half of the arches span the river—here a broad and beautiful stream—and the remainder are built on the neighbouring land, south of the Tweed. The total length of the bridge is 2,160 feet, and its greatest height, from the bed of the river, one hundred and twenty-six feet six inches, including the parapets; its breadth between the parapets is twenty-four feet, allowing a double line of railway to be laid. The viaduct is built entirely of stone, with the exception of the inner part of the arches, which is brick, laid in cement. There are about one million and a quarter cubic feet of masonry in the structure; and two million and a half of bricks have been placed in the arches. The greatest depth of water, at high tide, is twenty-three feet.

The design of the bridge is elegant, and the parapets are adorned on the outside by miniature corbelled arches. One half of the viaduct—that which spans the river—is in a straight line; and the other half curves to the east, on a radius of half a mile towards the south side. The road-way has an incline of one in two hundred, rising towards Berwick. The piers of the bridge, which are protected by handsome cutwaters, are carved up perpendicularly, and are narrowed near the spring of the arch, by means of offsets. The parapets and springs of the arches are of polished stone, but the rest of the masonry is only rough hewn. The appearance of the arches is extremely graceful.

The Tweed viaduct is perhaps the largest stone viaduct in the kingdom. Some similar structures may be longer, but less in height; and others may be higher, but not of such length. The last arch of this magnificent bridge was keyed on the 26th of March, 1850, by the wife of the resident engineer.

The bridge is secured at each end by substantial abutments; and in the centre, there is another abutment, less in size than the other, dividing the arches into two sides. When one-half of the arches had been erected, it was considered desirable, for the accommodation of the traffic, to erect a temporary bridge across the river, without waiting the completion of the stone viaduct, so as to avoid the uncertainty of the river operations. The quantity of timber used in the construction of the stone and timber bridges was not less than 300,000 cubic feet. The large embankment at the south end of the bridge, five-eighth of a mile in length, and in some places sixty feet high, completes the junction of the Tweedmouth with the Berwick station, making a total distance of one mile. It contains upwards of 700,000 yards of earthwork. The contractor at one time employed two thousand men in the various departments of his contract. The entire cost of the viaduct, amounting to about £200,000, has been borne by the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Co.

Since the passing of the Municipal Reform Act, a very material alteration has taken place in the government of this borough. The new corporation consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, and a recorder, with the usual assistant officers, styled the 'Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses of the Borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed.' A gaol delivery is held quarterly, if necessary, for the trial of capital offences; general quarter sessions are held four times a year, and Berwick is included in the circuit of county court towns under the acts of 1846-50. The mayor and bailiffs are lords of the manor, and hold courts leet and baron twice in the year. The borough returns two members to parliament. The new boundary act defines the limits of the borough to comprise the parish of Berwick, and the townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal; the same act appoints Berwick one of the polling stations, for taking votes at the election of representatives for North Northumberland.

The principal branches of maritime trade comprise the exportation of grain, and of salmon caught in the Tweed, which are sent to London market; the fishing season commences on the 15th February, and terminates on the 15th October; the more generally chosen part of the river for that pursuit is from the mouth of the Norham stream; a distance of seven miles. The herring fishery is also a branch of great importance, and is prosecuted with vigour. Coal is obtained in the district, of a good quality, and is exported to some extent. The country is well adapted to the purposes of agriculture, and some fine views may be contemplated in the vicinity. The public erections, besides those appropriated to divine worship, are the town hall, the barracks, the new gaol, the fine bridge, the noble viaduct, the ramparts, and a beautiful and extensive pier—the two latter form delightful walks. The new railway station may likewise be here mentioned; it stands on part of the site of the old castle, and commands a beautiful view of the valley of the Tweed. There are some capital inns in Berwick. The port enjoys the privilege of the warehousing act, passed in the 6th of George IV., and is now a bonded port for the reception of timber, wines, and colonial produce; and more recently, it has become included in the advantages derivable from railway transit—the North British line was opened from hence to Edinburgh on the 18th of June, 1846; and that from Newcastle to Berwick, subsequently finished, completes the great chain of communication between the English and Scottish capitals. Three newspapers, the 'Berwick Advertiser,' the 'Warder,' and the 'Journal,' are published here weekly.

There are two churches here under the establishment; one is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the other to St. Mary. The first is a flat roofed Gothic edifice; the building was begun in 1648, and finished in 1652; from being destitute of either tower or spire, it has a rather singular appearance, but these were considered unnecessary ornaments in the days of Cromwell. The living of Berwick is a vicarage, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. Geo. Hans Hamilton. St. Mary's is a handsome modern building. The other places of worship are those of the Church of Scotland, United Presbyterians, Independants, Baptists, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. There are many valuable schools, six of which were founded by the corporation, for the education of burgesses' children of both sexes; also a Latin grammar school, in connexion with the corporation; a charity school, supported by various bequests; a school of industry, a parochial one for the children of the workhouse, and others upon the national plan. An excellent dispensary for the relief of the poor, a public library, and a number of benevolent institutions are well supported. The weekly market is held on Saturday, and there is one for the sale of fat cattle on the first Saturday in every month. Fairs the last Friday in May, for horses and cattle, and statutes or 'hirings' for servants, on the first Saturdays in March, May, August, and November.

TWEEDMOUTH is a parochial chapelry (now forming a part of the borough of Berwick), in Islandshire, and connected with the county of Durham. It is situated at the south end of the bridge, about a quarter of a mile from Berwick, and consists of several streets, irregularly built, but the general appearance of the place has been much improved of late years. The Newcastle and Berwick Railway station is situated in the eastern part of the town. The inhabitants are extensively engaged in the salmon fishery; and the other branches of trade, exports and imports are of the like nature with those in Berwick—There is besides an extensive iron foundry. The corporation of Berwick are lords of the manor of Tweedmouth. The places of worship are, a chapel of ease, and a large and commodious meeting-house, in connection with the Church of Scotland.

SPITTAL a populous village, in the parish of Tweedmouth, about three quarters of a mile from Berwick, and comprised in that parliamentary borough, is situate at the mouth of the river, and is chiefly inhabited by fishermen and colliers. The curing of herrings is carried on here extensively; large quantities of coal are exported. Many good houses have been built for the accommodation of visitors, who have of late years resorted hither for sea-bathing. There is also a valuable mineral spa, the waters of which contain fixed air, iron and a portion of sulphuric acid. A large chapel for Independents is in the village.

ANCROFT is a parochial chapelry in Islandshire county of Durham, but situated locally to the north of the county of Northumberland, adjoining Berwick, The village of Ancroft is supposed to have been of much greater extent than at present, from numerous foundations of houses having been discovered in an adjacent field. The church, a very ancient edifice, was formerly a chapel of ease to the curacy of Holy Island. The living is now a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham.

SCREMERSTON is a village, four miles from Berwick containing an extensive coal mine, a brick and tile manufactory, belonging to R. Johnson & Co. and lime works.

CHIRNSIDE AND ALLANTON.

CHIRNSIDE is a parish lying in the eastern part of the Merse, on the northern side of the Whiteadder, and extending four miles in length by about three in breadth. The village is 50 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 13½ N.N.E. from Greenlaw, 9 N.W. from Berwick, and 6 N. from Dunse. It consists of two streets, the buildings of which are for the most part detached and straggling, and extend nearly a mile in length. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, an United Presbyterian chapel, and a Cameronian meeting house. From the hill on which the village is situated a fine view of many miles of fertile and well cultivated country, interspersed with many gentlemen's seats is obtained, the view to the south being bounded by the Cheviot hills. The estate of Ninewells, the family seat of the Humes, is in this neighbourhood; and David Hume, the celebrated historian, though born in Edinburgh, was, from his infancy, brought up in this parish, which may therefore proudly claim him as its own. Some vestiges of ancient encampments are discernable in this district.

Less than a mile to the west of the village is the pretty rural hamlet of CHIRNSIDE-BRIDGE, where a good bridge crosses the Whiteadder, and over which also the railway is carried by means of another bridge, a handsome structure of stone. Upon the banks of the river a species of gypsum is found, and in other parts of the district abundance of marl is obtained.

At ALLANTON, a delightful little rural village, one mile from Chirnside and seven from Dunse, two rivers, the Blackadder and Whiteadder unite, and here a neat stone bridge crosses the mingled streams. Blackadder House, the seat of Sir George Houston Boswall, is in this parish.

COCKBURNSPATH

Is a parish on the sea-coast—the village being 35½ miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. from Greenlaw, 14 N. from Dunse, 8 S. E. from Dunbar, and 21 N. W. from Berwick, situate on the road between the two last named towns and on the line of the North British Railway. The shore is precipitous, presenting a line of cliffs about one hundred feet above the level of the sea: behind the cliffs, the ground rises gently toward the hills, having many deep glens, or ravines' whose sides are sometimes sloping and covered with verdure, but the general appearance is rocky, with overhanging woods. Over one of these ravines, cut by the torrentuous course of the Pease-burn, is thrown "the Peaths,' or Pease-bridge, planned and erected by Mr. Henderson, in 1786; it is one hundred and twenty-three feet from the bottom of the Pease-burn, which flows beneath—three hundred feet in length, and fifteen in width; it is looked upon that it is a masterpiece of architecture, it is undersfood to be one of the highest bridges in the world, and is consequently an object of peculiar attraction to the curious visiting these parts. Nearly a quarter of a mile west of the bridge are the remains of an ancient castle, distinguished by no other appellation than that of the 'old tower.' As this parish is near the boundary of the two kingdoms, many traces of camps are visible on the rising grounds, and indellible proofs of military operations of former days arrest the eye in the passes. The ruins of the church of Auld Cambus, formerly united with this parish, are still standing. A church of the establishment, Free church, and a Secession chapel, are the present places of worship.

COLDINGHAM.

Coldingham is a parish lying on the coast of the German ocean—the village, a burgh of barony, is 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 21 N.N.E. of Greenlaw, 17 S.E. of Dunbar, 13 N.N.E. of Dunse, 11 N.N.W. of Berwick, and 4 from Ayton. It is charmingly seated upon a small eminence in the centre of a fine valley, at a short distance from the sea, near to St. Abb's Head, a noted point of land projecting into the sea. Its antiquity is unquestionably great, for it is distinctly pointed out in Ptolemy's map of Britain under the Roman sway, and in this respect surpasses Berwick and other more considerable towns whose existence is not authenticated for some ages posterior. About a mile west from St. Abb's is Coldenham Loch, of a triangular figure, and estimated at a mile in circumference. The village consists of two or three humble streets, with a cross in the centre. On its south side, are the ruins of the once magnificent and well-endowed priory of Coldingham, rebuilt by King Edgar, who personally assisted at its consecration; all that now remains of it is the east gable and north side (which form part of the modern parish kirk), with a few straggling fragments, including a small Saxon arch, part of the palace said to have been erected here by the royal founder of the priory. At one time, this religious house stood at the head of such establishments in Scotland, and was famed far and wide for its wealth and importance. When the church of the priory was destroyed, its fine-toned bell, according to tradition, was carried off to Lincoln. The priory has recently undergone great improvements; the west portion has been rebuilt in the same style of architecture as that of the original building, & the south wall has also been rebuilt in a style approaching to the ancient, but without its decorations; the corner towers are carried up, as they were supposed originally to have existed; the roof has been to a considerable extent renewed, the ceiling having been replaced with polished stained wood, in imitation of oak: in addition to all these improvements, a handsome gate-way has been erected. The cost of the improvements is estimated at £2,200, which was defrayed by the munificence of the crown and the liberality of the heritors. Fast Castle, in this neighbourhood, is supposed to be the place described as 'Wolf's Craig,' in the novel of 'The Bride of Lammermoor.'

COLDSTREAM,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ECCLES, BIRGHAM, LEITHOLM, CORNHILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COLDSTREAM is a market town and burgh of barony, in the parish of that name; 47 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.S.W. from Berwick, 10 S.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. from Dunse, and 9 N.E. from Kelso, situated on the north bank of the Tweed, and formerly derived importance from a ford on that river; by this passage Edward I. entered Scotland, with his forces, in 1296; and many other English and Scottish armies, before the union of the crowns, made their way by this facility to ravage the country of their respective enemies. It was last used by a Scottish army as an entrance into England in 1640, when the covenanters found it necessary to have recourse to that extreme measure against Charles I. The Tweed is crossed at this place by a strong bridge of red freestone, consisting of five arches, which forms a main link of communication between the two nominal divisions of the island; it is placed at the distance of a furlong from the east end of the town; and from this spot a very delightful view, up and down the woody banks of the river, presents itself. This neighbourhood is the scene of Sir Walter Scott's poem of Marmion, a tale of Flodden. The town is irregularly built—quite Scottish in its appearance, notwithstanding its proximity to England, while its border situation has rendered it eligible to participate with Gretna-green in the clandestine matrimonial trade. During the winter season Coldstream is much resorted to by nobility and gentry for fox-hunting; the packs of the Earl of Wemyss and the Duke of Buccleugh meet regularly in the neighbourhood.

The town is governed by a baron baillie and commissioners of police for the burgh. Justice of peace small debts courts are held monthly, and sheriff's courts six times a year. The trade here is not extensive, and manufactures are not seated in this locality. Two proprietary banking establishments have branches here. There are several respectable fire and life insurance agencies, and some good inns; amongst the latter the 'Bay Horse Hotel,' the 'Commercial Hotel,' and the 'Newcastle Arms Hotel.' The places of worship are an Established Church, a Free Church, and a meeting-house for United Presbyterians. At the east end of the town has been erected, by the friends of Charles Majoribanks, Esq., M.P. for Berwickshire, a handsome memorial to record the successful result of the contested election for this county in 1832. General Monk resided at Coldstream at the critical period when he awaited a favourable opportunity to advance into England, make a decisive impression by the presence of his army, and at once effect the restoration. During the winter of 1659-60 he raised here a regiment, which was, therefore, and has ever since been denominated the 'Coldstream Guards.' Previous to the Reformation, this place could boast of a rich priory of Cistercian nuns, but of the building not even a fragment or vestige is now to be discovered. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and there is one for cattle on the last Thursday of every month.

The village of ECCLES is nearly six miles from Coldstream, in a highly cultivated parish of that name; the latter extending nearly eight miles in length by six in breadth, lying to the west of Coldstream, and bordering the river Tweed. The surface of the country is in general level, the soil rich, and the grounds are well enclosed. There was once a nunnery of great magnitude and repute in the parish. This religious edifice, however, has shared the fate of the one that existed at Coldstream. The farm of 'Deadriggs,' in this district, was formerly the scene of a desperate battle, and a stone which rises nine feet above the surface of the ground, is said to mark the grave of one of the Percies who fell in the contest. BIRGHAM and LEITHOLM, two small villages in this parish, is where the principal retail business of it is carried on.

CORNHILL is a chapelry and village in the parish of Norham, otherwise Norhamshire, a detached part of the county of Durham, one mile and a half from Coldstream; situated on a branch of the York, Newcastle and Berwick railway, for which line there is a station in the village. The Tweed is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge of six arches, built in 1763. The church (or chapel) of Saint Helen is a neat structure in the early English style. The living is a perpetual curacy, to which the dean and chapter of Durham present. From the parsonage a very fine view is obtained of Flodden Feld and the beautiful Tweed. Near to the parsonage house is a parochial school, a neat building; and there is also a very commodious inn and posting house, which is well frequented.

CRANSHAWS, ABBEY SAINT BATHANS, BUNKLE,
WITH PRESTON AND LONGFORMACUS.

CRANSHAWS is a small, thinly populated parish, lying amongst the Lammermoor hills, and intersected by the parish of Longformacus; it is about 30 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 S.E. from Haddington, and about 10 N.W. from Dunse. The old castle of Cranshaws is an ancient edifice of great strength, and still entire: it is the residence of Lord Aberdour, the proprietor, for some months during the shooting season. The remains of many encampments shew, what both traditionary and historical records testify, that this part of the country has been the scene of much bloodshed and strife.

The parish of ABBEY SAINT BATHANS is seven miles from Dunse, also situated in the midst of the Lammermoor hills. The soil is light and dry, and on the banks of the Whiteadder, fertile and well cultivated; but the hilly district is barren and covered with heath. The remains of an ancient abbey of Bernardines, founded in 1170, and dedicated to Saint Bathan, by one of the Countesses of March, form the only object of interest or curiosity in the parish.

BUNCLE (or Bonkle) and PRESTON is a united parish, forming a square of nearly six miles. The soil on the high lands, towards the Lammermoor hills, was at one time thin, dry, and poor; but, by the application of lime and marl, it has been much improved. The rest of the parish, particularly on the banks of the Whiteadder, is a fertile loam, and well cultivated. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, the lands in the parish of Bonkill (then so called) were in the possession of a family of the same name: in the wars of the Bruce, Sir Alexander de Bonkill is frequently noticed; one of his female descendants marrying Sir John Steward, had a son, who was created Earl of Angus in 1329; this title in 1377 merged in the family of Douglas—and they, in addition to the title of Earls of Angus, are sometimes called Lords of Bonkill.

LONGFORMACUS parish, likewise in the Lammermoor district, is hilly and for the most part pastoral, but the low grounds are well cultivated; it is about twelves miles in length, by six in breadth. The village, which is about seven miles from Dunse, has been improved lately by the erection of several neat cottages, a school, and residence for the master. An established church and one for a free congregation are the places of worship. Two strikingly fine conical hills called the 'Derrington Laws,' rise in this parish, and form a conspicuous object in the distance.

POST OFFICE, Robert Laurie, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at ten minutes past ten; and are despatched thereto at ten minutes to eight in the morning.

CARRIER

To DUNSE, Robert Laurie, from his house, Cranshaws, Tuesday

DUNSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF EDROM, GAVINTON IN LANGTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNSE is a burgh of barony, and the largest town in the shire (Berwick not being taken in as strictly belonging to the county); it is 45¾ miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Berwick, 11 from Ayton, 8 N.N.E. from Greenlaw; and the Dunse branch of the North British Railway has a station about half a mile on the east side of the town. It lies nearly in the centre of the county, on a fine plane, under the southern skirts of Dunse-Law, upon which beautiful hill, before the town was burned down, it formerly stood. Its present position, at the head of a plain twenty-five miles long, encompassed on three sides by the Lammermoor ridge, the river Whiteadder running by it, is both beautiful and grand. Dunse is a place of high antiquity, but from its situation near the border, it was frequently destroyed by the English, before the succession of James to the throne of Elizabeth, on one of those occasions the town records were burned, so that no authentic account of its origin or early history has been transmitted to later ages. The present town is generally well built, the streets are lighted with gas, and contain many well-furnished and handsome shops. There are four branch banking-houses. The other principal business may be comprised in a brewery, several corn mills, a rope walk and a good grain trade. The town is governed by a baillie, appointed by Mr. Hay, the superior; the feuars manage by a council of nine the property vested in them; and the police commissioners superintend the business of that department, and some other matters connected with the burgh. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, and a sheriff's court six times in the year, at both of which debt claims of limited amount are adjudicated. The town hall, a fine Gothic building, standing in the centre of the market-place, was originally founded by the Earl of Moray, and the present edifice erected in 1816 by the feuars assisted by subscriptions. A new Corn Exchange and County Buildings, in Newtown street, have lately been erected. A new goal was built a short time since on the north side of the town, and contiguous to it is an ordnance store for the Berwickshire militia. The places of worship are the parish church, an Episcopal church, a Free church, and three United Presbyterian churches, parochial and Sunday schools, a subscription library and reading room, a masonic lodge, and some charitable societies are among the institutions maintained in Dunse. The learned and celebrated metaphysician and theologist, Joannes Duns Scotus, was born here in 1274, and died at Cologne in 1308. The Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the 'Fourfold State,' and other works—Abraham Robertson, L.L.D., professor of astronomy at Oxford—and Thomas M'Crie, D.D., in Edinburgh, were likewise born here. Dunse castle, a fine modern mansion, in the castellated style, stands about half a mile north of the town. The ancient edifice was the stronghold of Randolph, Earl of Moray, the nephew and copatriot of Bruce; it is now the seat of William Hay, Esq.: the interior decorations of the house, and the paintings with which it is embellished, render it one of the finest residences in this district of Scotland. The suburbs of Dunse are pleasant, and adorned with several elegant villas. The weekly market, a good one for grain in bulk, is held on Tuesday. Fairs on the first Thursday in June, the 26th of August, and 17th of November, or Tuesday after, for cattle and horses. There are also fairs for sheep on the fourth Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in May, the second Wednesday in July, and the fourth Wednesday in September.

EDROM is a parish and village—the latter about three miles and a half east from Dunse; situated near the road leading from that town to Chirnside, and on the banks of the Whiteadder. The parish of Edrom, which is ten miles in length by six in breadth, is watered by the Blackadder and Whiteadder streams; Dunse spa, once celebrated for its mineral properties, is on the borders of this parish. Much of the soil is fertile, and produces excellent corn; but towards the hills it is moorish and shallow.

GAVINTON is a village in the parish of Langton, situated two miles from Dunse, and half a mile south of the site of the old village of Langton, which has entirely disappeared. The present village, which is neat and regular in its form, obtained its name from Mr. Gavin, the late proprietor of the estate of Langton, which includes nearly the whole parish; it now belongs to the Marquess of Breadalbane, a descendant of Mr. Gavin. Formerly the proprietor of Langton occupied a castle in Langton wood; but for the last century the family resided at the mansion here, Langton House, now occupied by the Hon. Hannah Charlotte Tharpe, cousin to the nobleman above-named. In a small chapel in Langton wood, between the years 1670 and 1689, the Presbyterians used to assemble for worship; and it was in this humble and secluded temple that Veitch, and some other eminent divines, occasionally preached. After the latter period it was used for a short time by the Episcopalians, after which it fell to decay, and not a trace of the building now remains. There are now a neat church of the establishment, a Free church, and a parochial school in the village.

EARLSTOUN, LEGERWOOD, MERTOUN, NENTHORN, AND STITCHEL WITH HUME.

EARLSTOUN (anciently Ercildoun) is a parish and village—the latter 31 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 11 W. by N. from Kelso, 18 S.W. from Dunse, 15 N. from Jedburgh, 10 S.W. from Greenlaw, 8½ N.E. from Galashiels, and 7 S. from Lauder. The situation of this village is at once rare and beautiful, being seated in a rich valley encompassed by hills of a moderate height, which are interspersed by thriving plantations, and in a state of high cultivation; the Leader river flows on the west of the parish, and the Eden on the east. At one time the trade of the village and its neighbourhood was confined to weaving certain fabrics for the Glasgow houses, and now there are several respectable establishments employing a number of hands, the principal are Messrs. Whale and Co. in the manufacture of furniture stripes, ginghams, shawls, tweeds, &c.; Messrs. Wilson and Sons, in woollens and tweeds. Part of the tower which was the residence of Sir Thomas Learmont (commonly called 'the Rhymer'), who flourished in the thirteenth century, is still standing; a stone in the wall of the church bears this inscription in ancient characters—'Auld Rhymer's race lies in this place.' The seat of Cowden Knows stands on the side of a hill, it is an ancient building, and the locality is famous in Scottish song. When the Highland army under Prince Charles passed through this part of the country on their way to Kelso, a claymore was left at Fans, which was in the possession of Mr. Riddell, surgeon, of this place, for some considerable time, but has since passed into other hands. There are two fairs, on the 29th of June and the third Thursday in October, for cattle and horses

LEGERWOOD parish extends three miles in length by two and a half broad. Its elevated surface is well cultivated, being occupied by opulent and practically skilful farmers; and is adapted, in general, both for crops and pasture. The village of Legerwood is three miles from Earlstoun, situate on a cross road off the thoroughfare through Lauderdale. Boonhill, in this parish, was a signal station during the late war.

MERTOUN parish stretches about six miles along the north bank of the Tweed, with a breadth of nearly three miles; the whole is enclosed, and in a fine state of cultivation. The parish church stands near the Tweed, about five miles from Earlstoun.

NENTHORN parish abuts on Roxburghshire, and is four miles in length and nearly as much in breadth. The soil throughout is generally good, and its skilful culture is apparent.

STITCHEL and HUME are united parishes—the former in Roxburghshire, the latter in Berwickshire. The remains of Hume Castle, noted during the contentions on the borders, stand in this parish; they command an extensive prospect over almost the whole of the Merse and Roxburghshire. The village of Stitchel is situated about four miles north from Kelso; Hume village stands three miles south from Greenlaw, and the like distance north from Stitchel. There is nothing peculiarly attractive in this district as respects objects of curiosity, but there are some fine mansions with their pleasure grounds and plantations.

EYEMOUTH, AYTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EYEMOUTH is an ancient little seaport and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 50 miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. E. from Dunbar, 20 N. from Coldstream, 13½ N. E. from Dunse, 8 N. from Berwick, and three from Ayton station on the North British railway. It lies at the mouth of the Eye, where that river discharges its waters into the North Sea, from which circumstance the town and parish takes its name. The port is a very ancient one, being known as such so early as the reign of Alexander II. when it was resorted to by the monks of that age as a commodious harbour for importing supplies for their establishment, and for shipping wool, hides, &c. in which they trafficked. Shipping can work into and out of the bay at all times of the tide, or lie at anchor in the haven, secure from all winds except the north and north-east, or when the passage cannot be effected up the Frith of Forth; and the port is much frequented by wind-bound vessels. The herring fishery is a source of profitable employment to the greater part of the inhabitants. Evemouth was a great depot for smugglers; it is affirmed that at one time almost every house had secret cellars connected with it, wherein those engaged in the illicit trade concealed the goods and liquors landed here from the luggers, which frequented the harbour and neighbouring shores. The vigilance and energy of the preventive service, together with the judicious alteration of the duties, have, however, long destroyed this illegitimate mode of acquiring wealth, and turned the trade of the town into more honourable and less hazardous channels. On a small promontory, which stretches out into the sea, there are the remains of a regular fortification, supposed to have been constructed by a French officer entrusted with the command of the Queen Regent's troops.

A church of the establishment, a Free church, and chapels for Primitive Methodists, United Presbyterians, and a Baptist meeting house, are the places of worship. The St. Abb's Lodge of Master Masons, and the Land of Cakes Royal Arch Chapter, hold their meetings here, in a neat lodge-room, formed in 1757: it was in this room that Burns the poet was initiated in masonry. Fairs are held on the first Thursdays of June and October.

AYTON is a parish and village—the latter is two miles and a half from Eyemouth, and eight N. W. from Berwick, occupying a delightful situation on the left bank of the Eye, on the main line of railway between Edinburgh and the south. The parish describes an area of about four miles each way, including about two miles of sea coast, which is here bold and rocky: more inland the soil is rich, producing all kinds of grain. Several vestiges of encampments are discernible through the parish, and urns, with pieces of broken armour, have been occasionally brought to the surface by the plough. In the village is a church of the establishment and two Presbyterian chapels.

POST OFFICE, EYEMOUTH, John Johnston, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from Ayton) every day at twelve, and at twenty minutes to ten in the evening; and are despatched thereto every morning at ten minutes past seven, and five minutes past five in the evening,

POST OFFICE, AYTON, George Wood, Post Master.—Letters from LONDON and the SOUTH arrive every morning at six minutes past nine and seven in the evening; and are despatched thereto every afternoon at five minutes to four and ten minutes to eight in the evening.

Letters from EDINBURGH and the NORTH arrive every morning at a quarter-past ten, at ten minutes to four in the afternoon, and ten minutes to eight in the evening; and are despatched thereto every morning at six minutes past nine, and seven in the evening.

Letters from DUNSE, EDROM, and CHURNSIDE, arrive every morning at a quarter-past ten, and a quarter-past six in the evening; and are despatched thereto every morning at six minutes past nine, and at half-past eight in the evening.

Money Orders granted and paid at both offices.

FOULDEN AND MORDINGTON.

FOULDEN is a parish and village—the latter one of the prettiest little places in the county, is a burgh of barony; 52 miles E. by S. of Edinburgh, 10 E. of Dunse, and 5 N. W. of Berwick; pleasantly situated on the north side of the Whiteadder river, which is here confined between steep banks. Within the last ten years the dwellings have been nearly all rebuilt, in a neat and picturesque style. John Wilkie, Esq., is superior of the burgh. The parish, which lies in the eastern part of the Merse district, is two miles and a half in length by two in breadth; bounded by Ayton on the north, and Hutton on the south.

The parish of MORDINGTON lies in the south-eastern corner of the county, and the kirk is about one mile from Foulden. It was in the mansion-house of Mordington that Cromwell, when he passed the Tweed for the first time, established his quarters. It has been erroneously asserted that the Princess Margaret was married to James IV. in Lamberton church (now in ruins), in this parish. At the boundary of the parish with the liberties of Berwick is the toll-bar and hamlet of LAMERTON: and at this place (within the Scottish border), marriages were solemnized in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principle, as they were at better known Gretna. The remains of a Danish camp—Edrington castle situate at the top of a steep rock—and 'the Witches' Know,' where, little more than a century ago, several unfortunate women were burnt for witchcraft—are objects not unworthy the notice of the traveller journeying through this quarter of the county. Ironstone some years ago was discovered within the parish, and subsequently coal has been got on the estate of John Campbell Renton, Esq., of Mordington House.

GREENLAW AND GORDON.

GREENLAW is a burgh of barony, and considered (although Dunse is considerably larger) the county town of Berwickshire, it is 37 miles S. E. from Edinburgh, 20 W. from Berwick, 12 E. from Lauder, 7½ S.W. from Dunse, and 10 N. W. from Coldstream. It is situated in a valley on the north bank of the Blackadder, which stream is crossed by two bridges, and consists of one long street, with a square market place receding from the south side. After Berwick was taken by the English, the sheriff and county courts were transferred, first to Old Greenlaw (which was one mile to the south, but of which no vestiges remain), and subsequently to the present town, where they have been held ever since, except for a short time during the turbulent reign of Charles I, when they held their sittings at Dunse. Being seated near the centre of the shire, Greenlaw was by royal charter in 1596, and by act of parliament in 1696, ordained the head burgh of the county. A sheriff court and one for the recovery of small debts are held monthly; the justices' court sits at Dunse. The old gaol and courthouse, which stood in the churchyard, have been superseded by the present strong and handsome prison and elegant county buildings, erected in 1831, at the sole expense of, and presented to the shire by the late Sir W. P. H. Campbell.

The parish of Greenlaw lies in the centre of the Merse, extending seven or eight miles in length, from north to south, and on an average about two miles in breadth. The surface of the land is for the most part level, rising occasionally into slight detached eminences. Sheep-walks, moor, and soil adapted to turnips, are the main characteristics of the land. Besides the established church there are places of worship for Free Church and United Presbyterian congregations. A cattle fair is held on the 22nd of May, and another on the last Thursday in October.

GORDON village is five miles from Greenlaw, on the road from Edinburgh to Kelso. The river Eden intersects the parish, which extends seven miles in length by from two to four in breadth. At Castles, where some ruins still remain, resided, as is believed, the ancestors of the present Duke of Gordon; and Huntly and Huntleywood, the names of two farms in the parish, claim the honour of giving the title of Marquess of Huntly to his Grace's eldest son. Greenknow tower, a venerable structure (now the property of George Fairholm, Esq.) was frequently had recourse to as a place of refuge by the inhabitants, who fled thither when suddenly surprised by the incursions of the English, prior to the union between the two kingdoms. An Established church and a Free church are the places of worship.

HUTTON AND PAXTON.

ARE two small, pleasant and rural villages in the parish of Hutton, and district of Merse, lying to the west of Berwick bounds, from which the parish is divided by the river Whiteadder. Hutton is situate about seven miles from Berwick, in the northern part of the parish, and Paxton five miles distant, is in the eastern quarter. The latter village is understood to have formed the locality of the song entitled 'Robin Adair.' The Tweed, which bounds Hutton parish on the south, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, called the Union-bridge, from a point near Paxton to a place a little below Horncliffe, a village in the county of Durham; it forms the only connexion of the two sides of the river between Coldstream and Berwick, from which last-named town it is frequently visited by parties of pleasure; it admits two carriages abreast, and has been of great service in facilitating the introduction of coal and lime into Berwickshire. At Hutton a handsome new church was opened for divine service in April, 1835. The late Rev. P. Redpath, the erudite translator of Bœthius, was minister of this parish. The present minister is the Rev. Robert Kirk.

LAUDER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CHANNELKIRK, UGSTON, AND THIRLSTAINE.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish, as it is of the district of Lauderdale; 25 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 35 W. of Berwick, 21 N. of Jedburgh, 22 S.W. of Coldstream, 20 S.W. of Dunse, 17 N.W. of Kelso, 12 W. of Greenlaw, 7 N. of Earlstoun, and about 5 miles from the Stow station, on the North British railway. It is situated in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso, and consists principally of a line of houses on each side of the thoroughfare, with an additional street about the centre, at the west end of which is the town-house. The buildings are plain, and of irregular construction; and the town is destitute of any edifice that could lay claim to particular notice, until of late years. Now there are good school premises, neat and substantial houses, an excellent inn (the 'Black Bull'), in the centre of the town, two banks, and a few tasteful villas in the neighbourhood. The trade is chiefly of a local and domestic nature, and manufactures have not as yet imparted their benefits to this part of the district. The banks and the inns, several insurance agency offices, and some well stored shops, represent the main business of the place. A Freemasons' lodge is held in the town hall. The charter constituting Lauder, a royal burgh, was renewed in 1502, and the government vested in two baillies, and seven councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. By the reform act, it is joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh, in returning one member to parliament. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church and a Presbyterian meeting-house. The church, which stands to the south of the town-house, was erected in 1673, when the Duke of Lauderdale removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence; the edifice, though cruciform, is not remarkable for elegance. The most conspicuous object in and about Lauder is Thirlstaine Castle, a massive and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine wood, and is the seat of the family of Lauderdale. The castle, which has been considerably enlarged, stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, is fitted up in the best taste of the time of Charles II., and decorated with massive balustrades and cornices, and a profusion of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces; among the paintings, chiefly portraits, are some rare and valuable productions. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March, for hinds and herds; sixth Tuesday after first Tuesday in March, for servants; Friday before the twelfth of August for lambs; and fourth Friday in October, for servants.

The parish of CHANNELKIRK is situated among the Lammermoor hills, where they divide the counties of Edinburgh and Haddington from Berwickshire. On the banks of the rivulets, which, united form the river Leader (or Lauder), are about three thousand acres of tillage; but the hills are mostly covered with heath and are very bleak, and unproductive.

The village of UGSTON is about four miles from Lauder, on the south of the Edinburgh road, in the upper part of the vale of the Leader. Ugston is now the only village in the parish, and in it, the little business or trade that has existence throughout its entire extent, is almost exclusively centred. About a mile to the west of Ugston, are the remains of the village of CHANNELKIRK, from which, the parish takes its name; —the minister's manse and church being all that remains of the village, which at one time was a resting place for travellers by the old Edinburgh road, through the Lammermoors to Lauderdale.

POLWARTH AND FOGO.

POLWARTH is a parish in the district of Merse—the village now almost decayed, is 40 miles from Edinburgh, four from Dunse, and about three and a half from Greenlaw, situated on the road between the two last named towns. It was formerly of much greater extent, and, from its connection with Scottish song, continues to the present day the most interesting locacality in the district. On the green of Polwarth, in the centre of the village, it was an ancient custom for every new-married pair, with their company, to dance round an ancient thorn, the legend connected with which, according to Chambers, might furnish materials for a good romance. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair of Hermandston, whose family, so far back as the fifteenth century, terminated in coheiresses. It appears that the Misses Sinclair, of all their suitors, and they had many, preferred the sons of their powerful neighbour, Home of Wedderburn, and it so happened, that the youngest sister was beloved by the eldest Home (George), whilst the eldest placed her affections on the youngest whose name was Patrick. After the death of the father of the young ladies, they fell into the hands of an uncle, who was anxious to prevent their marriages, that he himself might become their heir, immured them in his castle, somewhere in Lothian. In this dilemma the fair prisoners contrived to get a letter transmitted to their lovers, by means of an old female beggar, and they were soon gratified with the sight of the two youths, accompanied by a determined band of Merse men, before the gate of their prison. The uncle made both remonstrance and resistance, but in vain, his neices was forcibly taken from him and carried off in triumph. Part of the nuptial rejoicing (for the marriage ceremony immediately ensued), consisted in a merry dance round the thorn, which even at that early period, grew in the centre of the village. The lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes; and while George carried on the line of the Wedderburn family, Patrick was the founder of the branch afterwards ennobled by the title of Marchmont. In commemoration of this remarkable affair for many years, all future marriage parties danced round the thorn, and a tune seems to have been composed, of the name 'Polwarth on the Green,' to which songs have been successfully adapted. On the front of the parish church (an ancient building), which stands about a mile south-east of the village, is a Latin inscription, importing that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In the vault of this church Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth, afterwards the first Earl of Marchmont and Lord Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum fro the fury of his persecutors, when a price was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland, which he happily effected. The noble mansion of the late Earl of Marchmont, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir H. H. Campbell, Bart. and his lady has established an infants' school.

The parish of FOGO, which lies to the south of that of Polwarth, is intersected and watered by the Blackadder, upon the right bank of which stream (said to be so fatal to the salmon species) stands the little village of Fogo: and about a mile further up the river is the ancient diminutive hamlet of CHESTERS, reposing on the site of a Roman encampment. The parish is six miles in length by between three and four in breadth, the land chiefly arable and fertile. A neat church and parish school are in the village.

SWINTON, WITH SIMPRIN, WHITSOME, LADYKIRK AND HORNDEAN.

THE parish of SWINTON, to which that of SIMPRIN was united in 1761, is in the district of Merse. The parish is intersected by the small river Leet, and near thereto is the neat village of Swinton, lying about 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 12 S.W. of Berwick, and 6 N. of Coldstream.

The small village of SIMPRIN is situated at the south-east corner of the parish. The estate of Swinton has been for upwards of seven hundred and fifty years the property of a family of that name, who originally acquired it as a reward for clearing the country of wild boars (or swine), whose mischievous and often ferocious depredations continually troubled and alarmed the inhabitants. The grant was afterwards confirmed by the royal ordonance of Malcolm Canmore, for the exertions of the Swintons in reinstating him on the throne. The celebrated Mr. Thomas Boston, author of the 'Fourfold State,' was for some time minister of Simprin. There are two annual fairs—one is held on the third Thursday in June, the other on the fourth Tuesday in October.

WHITSOME (including the abrogated parish of Hilton) is about four miles and a half long, and two and a half broad. The land is principally composed of a deep rich clay, but there is some extent of marsh or oozy ground. The small village of Whitsome is situated nearly in the centre of the parish, at the distance of about three miles from Swinton.

The parish of LADYKIRK lies on the north bank of the Tweed, having the parish of Hutton on the north-east, and Whitsome and Swinton joining it on the west side; it extends about three miles along the margin of the river, with a breadth of from one to two. Lately has been thrown across the Tweed here a new bridge, constructed by subscription—a most valuable improvement to this locality, as fatal accidents frequently occurred by fording the river at this part. The church of Ladykirk, a venerable building, completely enshrouded in ivy, stands near the Tweed, about four miles from Swinton and nine from Berwick. Tradition ascribes its erection to the fourth James, in gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood when fording the river here at the head of his army. He dedicatetd the edifice to 'Our Lady,' hence denominated Ladykirk, which name was subsequently extended to the whole parish, previously designated Upsettlington. The soil of the district is naturally good from its local situation; cultivation has made it rich and beautiful, and it is celebrated for the breed of cattle and sheep. The small village of HORNDEAN belongs to this parish. An annual fair is held in Ladykirk on the 5th of April.

WESTRUTHER, HOUNDSLOW AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WESTRUTHER, is a parish, chiefly in the Lammermoor district—the village, a small one, is 32 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 8 from Lauder, 6 W. by N. from Greenlaw and 5 N. from Gordon; situated on the road between Lauder and Dunse. The parish, which is six miles in length by four in breadth, is under the best process of husbandry. Spottiswoode—the fine residence of John Spottiswoode, Esq. is in this parish; Wedderlie—the seat of Lord Blantyre, is in the neighbourhood, and the ruins of Ively Castle—the walls of which are pretty entire, stand on the north eastern corner of the parish. It was one of those castellated mansions of residence and defence that were common on the borders before the union of the two crowns, in the reign of James VI. There are two places of worship—one under the establishment, the other a Free church. There are also a Free church school and a parochial one. In this parish is the village of HOUNDSLOW, a straggling assemblage of dwellings on a barren heath.

BUTESHIRE.

THE Islands of BUTE, ARRAN, GREAT and LITTLE CUMBRAY (or Cumbrae), and INCH-MARNOCH, compose this shire, which comprises 161 square miles of land, 4 square miles of lake, and, by a recent calculation, about 30,000 acres of cultivated, and upwards of 70,000 of uncultivated ground. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. The northern extremity of Bute projects into the district of Cowal, Argyllshire; and the water division between the island and the latter is often so slender, that vessels find a difficulty in navigating the straits, which have obtained the title of 'the Kyles of Bute.' The southern part forms the western shore of the Firth of Clyde. About the middle it is narrowed by the indention of bays on either side. The length of the island is fifteen, and its breadth averages five miles. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous, but on the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable, with the low grounds, of being cultivated so as to produce fine crops of barley, oats, &c. The island altogether is distinguished for picturesque beauty, and both the botanist and geologist will find it a rich field for their respective researches. The antiquary, also, will discover many relics of bygone days existing in the island; among others, the interesting ruins of Rothesay, East and West Kaines, and Kilmory Castles. Here, as on all the west coast of Scotland, there is little or no extent of sea-beach, in comparison with other shores; the marine border is in most places rocky, with several good natural harbours. On the south-eastern side, the island is clothed with fine plantations, raised by the taste of the late Marquis of Bute, whose seat, Mount Stuart, an elegant modern mansion, lies on the woody slope facing the entrance to the Clyde.

The CLIMATE of Buteshire is eminently salubrious—neither mists nor noxious fogs, so prevalent in the east of Scotland, infest it; snow rarely lies on its hills, and the only qualification to its general genial character, is a liability to severe and sudden rains. In the interior, in a secluded situation, the late celebrated tragedian, Edmund Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from public life. The view of the island from the sea is enlivened by several other cottages on the different green declivities. Bute has for many years been the place of summer resort, for sea-bathing and ruralization, of the fashionable mercantile gentry of the west, who congregate chiefly in and about Rothesay, its capital, and contribute materially to the vivacity of the place.

The large Island of ARRAN lies to the southward of Bute, and between the peninsula of Cantyre and Ayrshire: in form it approaches an oval, extending from north to south nearly twenty-four miles, and in breadth about fourteen. While Bute is mostly low and green, Arran is lofty and brown, with many heathy mountains, some of which exceed three thousand feet in altitude. A small portion of the lower grounds is cultivated, but the whole island is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves: the most distinguished is that on the west, opposite to Campbeltown, called 'the King's Cave,' from its having afforded shelter to Robert Bruce, before he discomfited Baliol, and ascended the throne of Scotland: it is one hundred and twenty feet in length, sixty in height, and forty-eight in width. Arran belongs principally to the Duke of Hamilton, who has on the island an ancient though somewhat modernized seat, called Brodick Castle; it furnished the title of Earl to the chief of the house of Hamilton, who was regent during the minority of Mary Queen of Scots. The island comprehends two parishes, and its villages are Lamlash and Brodick. It is particularly famous for the excellence of its whiskey; and coal, freestone, and ironstone are said to lie beneath the surface of the soil. The beautiful little island of INCH-MARNOCH, rising a few miles south-west of Bute, is about a mile in length; near its eastern shore are the ruins of a chapel dedicated to Saint Marnoch. The CUMBRAYS are two small islands, lying in the Firth of Clyde, betwixt the isle of Bute and Ayrshire: the greater Cumbray lies highest up the Firth, and is two miles and a half in length, by a breath of one and a half, distant from the coast of Ayrshire about two miles. The capital, and the only town on the island, is Millport, a neat little place on the north side, with a harbour. The island forms a parish, to which the lesser Cumbray is attached: this latter island is about a mile in length, by half a mile in breadth. These Cumbrays once belonged to the Norwegians, and were frequently the objects of contest with the Scots. Two-thirds of the larger Cumbray belong to the Earl of Glasgow, and the remainder is the property of the Marquis of Bute. The Earl of Eglintoun is the owner of the lesser Cumbray.

The island of Bute at one period contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but two parishes, and the shire altogether only five. The The constituency in 1847 was 414. The only royal burgh is Rothesay; the county is represented in parliament by one member. Bute gives the title of Marquis to the family of Stuart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquis of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stuart, a son of Robert II, who, by his father's grant, became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in 1703.

The total Annual Value of Real Property in Buteshire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £22,541 and the amount assessed to the Property Tax in 1843 was £30,976, 4s. 5d, and in 1849, £40,570.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES OF KILBRIDE AND KILMORY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BRODICK AND LAMLASH, WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN has been partially described under the head of Buteshire, to which county it belongs. It is divided into two parishes, KILBRIDE and KILMORY, and its villages are Lamlash and Brodick. Kilbride parish occupies about one-half of the island, on the east side, extending eighteen miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, are said to have derived their designation from Saint Bride or Bridget; and the fame of this sainted female seems to have been extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride are still remaining. The present edifice, which is situated in Lamlash, was erected in 1774. The anchorage in the bay of this village is reckoned the best in the west of Scotland; affording perfect security to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish channel. The haven forms a natural basin, with the high protecting rocky islet of Holy Island lying at its mouth. On the inner side of the bay is the village, where there is a good inn. In this parish are some tall obelisks, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles, or places of worship. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the island; he munificently contributes a sum annually towards the repairs of the two packets on this station, as likewise for the support of a surgeon for the necessitous sick of the island. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, for the recovery of small debts, and the punishment of misdemeanours and other petty offences.

The parish of KILMORY occupies about half the island of Arran, on its western side, and the kirk of Kilmory is situate on the southern extremity. Arran Castle, the seat of the Duke of Hamilton, is placed on a rocky bank, which rises from the north side of the bay of Brodick. The bank forms part of a peninsular elevation or shoulder, projecting from the base of Goatfield (or Goatfell) mountain, which eminence rises nearly three thousand feet above the level of the sea, and overlooks the three kingdoms. Brodick village contains a good inn. The island is noted for its station as a herring fishery; in a good season, the value of the fish taken amounts to several thousand pounds, and a great number of the inhabitants are supported from this source of industry, whilst others are occupiers of small plots of land, in the cultivation of which they obtain subsistence. The climate of the island is considered highly salubrious, and the longevity of people is remarkable. A fair is held in Lamlash, on Lammas (old style), and at Brodick on the first Wednesday after the 20th of June; and another for horses, in the month of January.

MILLPORT, Isle of Cumbbay.

THE Isles of CUMBRAY (or Cumbrae) have been already noticed at a preceding page, in the description of Buteshire. Millport is a small but improving sea-bathing village, charmingly situated on the south side of the greater Cumbray, about four miles from Largs, in Ayrshire; with which town a communication is maintained by means of a regular ferry boat, ready at any hour; while for the steam packets plying between this town and Ardrossan, Ayr, Greenock, and Glasgow, the excellent harbour and pier here present perfect convenience for the landing or embarkation of passengers. Eighty years ago this place possessed only one dwelling, the hut of a fisherman. The number of inhabitants in the two Cumbrays, amount at the present time, to about twelve hundred, of whom a considerable proportion are resident in Millport; and in the summer months, from the influx of visitors, a life and bustle is exhibited which forms an agreeable contrast to the quietude prevailing in other parts of the isles. The principal object of attention is a beautiful marine pavilion, in the pointed style of architecture, belonging to the dowager Countess of Glasgow, who is owner of nearly two-thirds of the isle, the remainder belonging to the Marquis of Bute. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church and Baptist and Episcopalian chapels. The parish school is kept in a very neat structure, and well attended. The inhabitants of these isles are a class remarkable for their industrious habits—they are chiefly fishermen, owners of their own boats, and many of them are likewise weavers, who ply at the loom the whole day, and at night betake themselves to the waters, as an additional means of subsistance. Some parts of the greater Cumbray are well cultivated, producing good wheat, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the lesser Cumbray is a lighthouse. This isle is the property of the Earl of Eglintoun.

POST OFFICE, Millport, David Wishart, Post Master.—Letters arrive from GREENOCK every morning at eleven (Sunday excepted), and from GREENOCK and LARGS every evening at six, and are despatched to GREENOCK and LARGS every morning at half-past six, and afternoon at four.

ROTHESAY, PORT BANNATYNE & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ROTHESEY is a royal burgh, a town of great antiquity, and the capital of its parish; 96 miles w. from Edinburgh (by Mid-Calder), 40 s.w. from Glasgow, 22 from Lamlash, in the Isle of Arran, 12 from the Cumbrays, and 9 from Largs; finely situated at the head of a bay, called Rothesay, on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire. The origin of Rothesay was its castle, whose ruins yet exist, and the following are considered as some of the most remarkable particulars respecting it:—The first mention of it in history is in 1228, when it was besieged by Hushac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Man, and taken after a stout resistance; having been recovered from the northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1263, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs. It was seized by the English during the reign of John Baliol, but in 1311 it surrendered to Robert Bruce; in 1334, Edward Baliol took the castle, and fortified it; it soon afterwards, however, submitted to Bruce, the steward of Scotland. King Robert II. visited this castle in 1376 and in 1381, he again visited it in 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David, Duke of Rothesay, which has ever since been the principal Scottish title of the heir apparent. Additional facts are given in Mr. Wilson's admirable 'Guide to Rothesay,' to which we refer our readers.

The herring fishery, which has long been active here, caused a great revival in Rothesay, and stimulated the restoration of decayed buildings and the erection of new ones: fish curing is still carried on, but not to that extent now as formerly. Cotton spinning, and the manufacture of cottons and muslins by power looms, give employment to many hundreds of hands; there are several mills or factories in Rothesay, worked by steam and water power. Three branch banks and one for savings, and several comfortable hotels are in the town, viz.:—The Royal Hotel, in Albert place; the Victoria, in Victoria-street; the Queen's, in Argyle-street; and the Bute Arms Hotel, in Guildford-street, they are all conducted in a manner satisfactory to their numerous visitants. The lodging houses are very numerous, and upon every scale. A newspaper is published here every Saturday, called the 'Buteman,' by Mr. Robert M'Fie, High-street. About a mile to the east of the town is a salutary mineral spring, very efficacious in cutaneous diseases; near this is Dr. Paterson's Hydropathic establishment. The bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground excellent; the quay was greatly enlarged, and the harbour much improved and deepened about twenty-five years since, at a very considerable expense. On the north-east side of the entrance to the bay, from the Frith of Clyde, stands a fine and conspicuous lighthouse, the beacon of which is revolving and intermitting. The battery is placed a little beyond the end of Princess-street, on the shore of the east bay, and is mounted with several pieces of cannon. The town hall and county buildings were rebuilt, at an expense of upwards of £4,000, raised by assessments on the county and burgh, and by subscriptions: they form a handsome pile, and are ornamented with an elegant castellated tower, containing a bell, and beautiful clock, having two transparent dials, which at night are illuminated; the clock was the gift of the late lamented Marquis of Bute: the edifice comprising a spacious court-room, in which the sheriff, burgh, and justice of peace courts are held, and the town and sheriff clerk's offices, with other requisite apartments. Beneath the court room is the prison. The Victoria Hall, a splendid building near the Town Hall, was opened in 1858, and built by James M'Indore, Esq. at a considerable expense. The body of the hall is used for lectures, concerts, public meetings, &c. There are several good schools and academies in the town, amongst the latter is Croft Lodge Academy, West Bay, conducted by Mr. J. Monro. Rothesay was erected into a royal burgh by Robert III. under charter dated 12th January, 1400; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI. in 1584. The government of the town is vested in a provost, two baillies, a dean of guild, the town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff court is held on every Tuesday, and that for the burgh on Thursday during the session; a justice of peace court for the recovery of small debts, sits on the first Monday in every month. The quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesdays in the months of March, May, and August, and the last Tuesday in October, and all criminal cases, for the circuit court justiciary, are tried at Inveraray. The list of places of worship will be found at the end of the directory of the town, and the educational establishments at the commencement.

In the neighbourhood of this respectable town there are many mansions of the nobility and gentry. About five miles south is Mount Stuart, the beautiful and romantic seat of the Marquis of Bute, in the occupation of the Marchioness and Lord James Stuart, the Marquis's uncle. In the same direction is Woodend, or (as it is more generally denominated) 'Kean's Cottage,' from having been built by that eminent tragedian; the house, which is now the residence of George Ballard, Esq. stands in a sweet retired spot, a little above the western shore of a fine fresh-water loch, whose waters are usefully employed in propelling the machinery of various mills.

The climate of Bute being very salutary, from its mildness to those afflicted with pulmonary complaints, the faculty recommend numerous patients to the balmy influence of Rothesay. Four miles to the north-east, on the opposite shore of the bay, in Argyleshire, is Castle Toward, a massive modern edifice, erected by the late Kirkman Finlay, Esq. and now the residence of his son; the grounds contain the ruins of the ancient castle. In the neighbourhood of Mount-Stuart an extensive vitrified fort has been discovered; and on the summit of a gentle eminence, called 'Chapel-hill,' rising above Argyle-street, are seen the remains of the ancient chapel of Saint Bride. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the first Wednesday in May, third Wednesday and the following Thursday in July, and the last Wednesday in October—all chiefly for cattle.

KAMESBURGH, (formerly called Port Bannatyne) is situated full two miles north from Rothesay, and is a fish-curing station. This branch of industry is, however, not prosecuted extensively at the present time. The port possesses a small quay, and there are several well-furnished houses, the latter occupied principally by the families who make this pleasant village a summer retreat. Half a mile distant is the ancient Castle of Kames, the mansion of Duncan Hoyle, Esq. Nearly a mile to the west is the new church of North Bute, erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,000, defrayed by the Marquis of Bute; and between the village and Ardbeg Point is a handsome Roman Catholic chapel.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded by the German Ocean on the east, by Sutherlandshire on the south and south-west, and the Pentland Frith on the north separates the mainland from the Orkney Islands. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, and is nearly forty miles in length, and about twenty-five in breadth at the middle: altogether it comprehends 487 square miles of land, 10 square miles of lake, 92,333 acres of land cultivated, and 347,347 acres uncultivated.

The EARLY HISTORY of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the Catinii, from whom the present appellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places, and the monumental remains, indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Gernego, the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity, combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date. Caithness is an Earldom in the family of Sinclair. This peerage is of remote antiquity: before the year 1450 it was enjoyed by three successive families, who lost it either by forfeiture or extinction; at length it was renewed in the person of William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, a great-grandson, by the female line, of Robert II; he was made chancellor of Scotland in the reign of James II, and received a grant of the Earldom of Caithness. The Earldom of Orkney having been derived from the King of Norway, though confirmed by a Scottish monarch, was resigned to the Crown in the reign of James III. After a long period the title was revived, but not in the family of the Sinclairs of Caithness.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is almost entirely argillaceous heavy land, lying upon horizontal clay-slate, which, in wet seasons, keeps the water upon the surface. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few inclosures are but of a rude quality. The greatest elevations in this county above the level of the sea are, Maiden Paps, 2,000; Scarry Hills, 1876; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 feet. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809 a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads through the country has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county: clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated; the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and bear, both of good quality, and the yearly exports amount to many thousand bolls. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game; and throughout the district, hares, rabbits, grouse, plovers, and a bird called the snowfleet, are in great plenty: the latter bird, about the size of a sparrow, is exceedingly fat and delicious. In the caverns along the coast, seals form their harbours: the hunters enter in small boats, with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, whom they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. This county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat. Freestone and limestone abound in many parts. The CLIMATE, though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude (the fifty-ninth degree), where the duration of the night, at one period of the year, is nineteen hours.

RIVERS, LAKES, &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets, and some waters of greater magnitude: the principal among the latter are Forss and Thurso rivers on the north-west, and Wick and Berrydale on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Wattin, a fine sheet of water about three miles in length, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. The only bays of any note are Sinclair Bay, on the north-east, and Cannes Bay, on the north.

Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the twelfth century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—Wick, and a burgh of barony—Thurso. The county sends one member to parliament; and Wick, joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, elects another representative.

LYBSTER IN LATHERON, SWINEY,
AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LYBSTER is a village in the parish of Latheron, 13 miles s. from Wick and 25 N. from Helmsdale, situated on the south-east side of the county; the parish extends from the Ord of Caithness, twenty-seven miles along the coast, by a breadth of from thirteen to fifteen miles The village, which, some thirty years ago sprung from a mere waste, goes on increasing annually in population and habitations. The houses are substantially built and regularly laid out, and in the suburbs are some which are entitled to come under the description of neat and handsome residences. No port from Cromarty to the Orkney Isles has greater claims on the attention of the mariner, nor has any been more successfully or beneficially employed for the purpose of the herring fishery. From the indentation of its coast, with bold headlands at either side, which throw off the sweeping currents so general on the Caithness shores, there is comparatively still water at the entrance, and perfect security within the harbour. The 'Brothers' Port,' the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the eighth and tenth centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these 'sea kings,' or pirates; but it was subsequently destroyed by a devastating land-flood, which choked up the small river that flows into it with trees (still extant), earth, moss, and stone; and thus converted into a solid beach and cornfield what theretofore was capable of affording shelter and safety to the largest ships of the present day: however, from the progress already made in clearing out this obstruction, there can be no doubt that, that at an incredibly small expense, the importance of this valuable harbour may be increased even beyond its ancient reputation, a proof of the disastrous occurrence just related is furnished by the fact that, but an inconsiderable time since mooring ring-bolts were to be seen at a rock three hundred yards from the present high water mark, upon a contiguous eminence the ruins of a Roman Catholic chapel, and some well-carved relics in Morayshire freestone, still survive the lapse of time. A good road intersects the parish along the shore, and on this road are some pretty cottages.

A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship and with these are connected schools. LATHERON Kirk stands half way, on the coast near to a road that crosses the country to Thurso.

The village of SWINEY (or Swinnie) lies further northward and on the great road to Wick and Thurso. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the 12th November, and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th July.

POST OFFICE, LYBSTER, Alexander Finlayson, Post Master.—Letters (from the SOUTH) arrive at a quarter before ten, and are despatched at twenty minutes past nine in the morning.

Letters (from the NORTH) arrive at three in the afternoon, and are despatched at twenty-five minutes before three in the afternoon.

THURSO, AND THE VILLAGE OF CASTLETOWN.

THURSO is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, nearly 290 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20½ N.W. from Wick, the same distance W. from John o'Groats, 46 E. from Tongue, and 96 miles from Bonar Bridge, by way of Tongue and the Western road. Thurso is situated on the north-west coast of the county, at the head of a spacious bay, surrounded by a rocky coast; its headlands forming a bow, renders it one of the finest bays in the kingdom. Here the turbulent waves of the Pentland Firth, and the powerful currents, find resistance on the east by Dunnet head, which stretches out its rocky promontory with a precipitous front, whilst the furious winds from the west are checked in their wild career by the Holburn head,—its original name, and what it is still called in the Gaelic language, is 'Inverhorsa'; Inver signifying the mouth of a river. It is said, and with probability, that the name is derived from Horsa, a Saxon general, who landed here in the fifth century. The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caithness. Torfæus, the Danish historian, mentions, that, in the beginning of the eleventh century, Count Moddan, quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms 'The Town of Caithness,' and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel. He adds, that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II., king of Scotland, about the year 1005, resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchannan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes, in Moray, which in those times comprehended Caithness and all the northern counties of Scotland. Vessels of any burthen may find shelter in the bay under any weather, and few places possess superior advantages for refuge to the mariner as Scrabster roads as it is called. A pier has been erected by subscription, but not of that magnitude demanded by the nature of the place, and the depth of water which one upon a larger scale, with the addition of a breakwater, would ensure. The town, which is situated about two miles to the eastward, on the left bank of the river, is regularly neat it clean, and is rapidly increasing in size, numerous buildings being at present in course of erection, amongst which may be mentioned a very handsome Free church, and also a neat chapel for the Original Seceders. The inhabitants of the town are respectable—many indeed genteel and fashionable. The walks are romantic, and some approach close to the edge of the precipitous cliffs overhanging the sea. The river too is beautiful, and famed for the almost miraculous draughts of salmon occasionally furnished. Either bank is connected by an elegant stone bridge, but the want of a pier is much felt, as vessels intending to enter must wait the tide before they cross the bar. This is a great inconvenience to the main export of the place, which consists of the 'Caithness pavement,' an article in great demand, and the manufacture of which is carried on to a prodigious extent, and involves the prosperity of the place. The peculiar excellence belonging to this staple, is its durability, its resistance to moisture, and its retention of an unbroken surface. Of the monetary establishments, branches of the National Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank, the Aberdeen Town and County Bank, and a savings' bank, may be mentioned as useful in their respective departments. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir George Sinclair, as superior.

The places of worship are the parish church, two Free churches, and chapels for Original Seceders, Independents, and Baptists. The church of the establishment is a neat Gothic structure, with a tower and clock—the latter presented by the late Henry Miller, Esq., of London, but a native of Thurso. There are parochial and Free church schools, well conducted and attended, and several highly respectable private ones for young ladies. A little to the east of the town stands Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir George Sinclair, Bart., an ancient building in excellent repair, and enlarged some years ago by an elegant modern addition. Thurso parish gave birth to Richard Oswald, Esq., one of the plenipotentiaries from the court of Saint James, for settling the peace of 1783; it is also the birth place of the late Sir John Sinclair, Bart., of Ulbster, whose name is associated with the statistical account of Scotland, which was collected and published in consequence of his indefatigable exertions; to whose memory a very elegant monument of freestone has lately been erected on a square piece of ground fronting the established church; it was presented to the town by Alexander Miller, Esq. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the second Tuesday in July, and the first Tuesday in September.

CASTLETOWN is a small neat village in the parish of Olrick (or Olrig), situated rather more than 15 miles N.W. of Wick, and nearly 6 E. of Thurso. In the immediate vicinity of the village is the mansion of George Traill, Esq., M.P. upon whose estate is quarried an excellent kind of stone, adapted to the purposes of flooring, and flagging foot ways, &c. It lies in beds of from three quarters of an inch to six inches in thickness. Blocks have often been raised measuring one hundred superficial feet; from hence they are carried to the shore, where they are prepared and dressed, previous to shipping—to facilitate which, the small and convenient harbour has been formed.

WICK

IS a parish and royal burgh—the town a considerable one, improving and flourishing, is 290 miles N. from Edinburgh (20 of which may be saved by crossing the ferry from Tain to Dornoch; 61 N. by E. from Dornoch and 20 S. W. from Thurso; situated on the sea coast or bay of Wick, where the river of its name enters the North Sea. The town is divided into three parts—namely, Pulteneytown, Louisburgh, and Wick. The old town, or rather Wick proper, is composed of the High street and Bridge street; the former runs from the bay along the curvature of the river, and is flanked on either side by several lanes. A few detached modern houses are impaired in appearance by the contiguity of older ones, with their gable ends towards the street, but, in the course of yearly improvements, these are gradually disappearing. Bridge street, more regular in its construction, is ornamented by several elegant erections; among which the town and county buildings form a neat and handsome pile, faced with free stone and surmounted by a cupola exhibiting a public clock. The interior comprises a spacious apartment, containing portraits of the late eminent Sir John Sinclair, and other local celebrities, and which is used as a council-room, and for the meetings of the commissioners of supply for the county; also the sheriff-clerk's, town-clerk's, and other offices. Adjacent is a plainer building for holding the town and county court: behind are the criminals' and debtors' jails. The suburb of LOUISBURGH is regular in its streets and possesses some good buildings: a large temperance hall (in which all public meetings are held), is among the latter. Among other objects deserving notice here, is an extensive museum of natural curiosities and coins, the property of Dr. Sinclair, to which the public are courteously granted access. Two other suburban villages are STAXIGO and BROADHAVEN, which, with KEISS and SARCLET, where harbours have been erected are populated principally by fishermen.

PULTENEYTOWN, which may be reckoned the seat of the manufactures, commerce, and fisheries of Wick, to which it is still considered a suburb, was purchased when a mere waste by the society in London, formed for extending the British fisheries, and various means have been adopted to carry out the great and beneficial object of the society. The local business of the society is managed by an agent, whose residence overlooks the harbours, and who is ex officio, chairman of the Pulteneytown Improvement Commission, who, under a special act of Parliament, have the oversight of lighting and cleaning the town, for which an assessment is imposed. There are two harbours, but the depth of water within is not sufficient for ordinary glass vessels; and during easterly winds the heavy swell in the bay renders it the most perilous sea-ground on the east coast, and the scene of frequent disasters, so that as yet the hopes and expectations of the society have not been fully realized. The contemplated conversion of the bay into a harbour of refuge, by piers stretching across its mouth, would, however be of great importance, as affording protection to the fleet of fishing boats and to vessels, passing through the Pentland Frith, while it would obviate much of the inconvenience experienced by vessels commercially connected with the locality. This portion of the burgh has been laid out with a due regard to regularity and taste, having a large square in the centre, from which diverge numerous streets in different directions—those to the north being terminated by handsome terraces, overlooking a rapidly extending part of the town known as LOWER PULTENEYTOWN, here are situated principally the warehouses, cooperages, and places of business; whilst at the south are ranges of buildings, occupied by manufacturers of ropes sail-cloth, &c. There is also a large distillery, brewery, and corn mill at the upper end, carried on under the well known firm of James Henderson & Co., and in the vicinity an hospital for sick poor, and a reservoir which supplies the town with water, conveyed in an aqueduct from a neighbouring sheet of water, the Lock of Hempriggs. Near the river banks also are steam saw mills—one of which, particularly, is of great power—its machinery working eight circular saws, in the manufacture of staves for barrels from billets, and cutting ten thousand superficial feet daily. Ship building has entirely ceased since the demise of Mr. Bremner, whose engineering talents were successfully employed in floating the Great Britain leviathan steam-ship, which grounded some few years since on the coast of Ireland; but the business of boat building has greatly in increased, and with the manufacture of herring-barrels and netting, is the principal source of employment in the winter months. The manufacture of rock-hill pavement is largely carried on here, and there is an iron foundry, but the herring trade must be taken as the staple, and in the season commencing in July, and ending in September, the fishery is prosecuted to an extent unparalled elsewhere. The population is doubled here at this time by persons from all parts, and the bay is crowded with boats, manned frequently by three thousand persons engaged in the trade (the number of boats in the district in late years range from 1,000 to 1,100, with five men to each boat), besides great numbers, both male and female, employed in the process of curing the fish. The scene at this period is very animated both on the water and the land. For several months succeeding the termination of the season, extensive exports are made to Ireland, to the Baltic ports, and elsewhere, while considerable importations of timber are made from Norway, and ports in the Moray Firth. The gross value of the herrings exported in one year is computed to be from £150,000. to £200,000, and the amount of capital invested in the trade, is very great, diffusing wealth and employment over an extensive district. Four bank establishments are settled here — namely, branches respectively, of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Aberdeen Town and County Bank,' the 'City of Glasgow Bank, and the Union Bank of Scotland;—the premises of the first named, which stand in Bridge-street, present a handsome front, decorated with Ionic columns. Near the market (which is merely an open space, surrounded by old ruinous buildings) is the Caithness National Security Savings' Bank—a very useful institution to this district. Three hotels afford the accommodation found at well conducted establishments of the kinds, they are situated respectively in Bridge-street, High-street, and Pulteneytown. Two well-conducted newspapers issue from the press of Wick weekly—they are noticed with their titles under their proper head Communication with the south is had by the mail coach, and by bi-weekly steamers plying to Aberdeen and Granton.

Wick was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1593, by the influence of George Earl of Caithness, whose principal residence was at the strong castle of Gernego, concerning the antiquity of which there is no tradition, but by its construction and workmanship it appears to have been of Danish origin; it is situated about two miles from Wick, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. Another interesting ruin in the vicinity is an old castle, known as the 'Old Man of Wick,' which with a fine light-house on Noss-head, forms an excellent land mark to seamen, otherwise the district is comparatively destitute of antiquities except some of a very remote and obscure period. The old tower of Ackergill has been extended into an elegant castellated mansion, for the chief proprietor in the district, Sir G. Dunbar. The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a parliamentary burgh, and the station of returns at elections: it joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty, in returning a member to the Imperial parliament; the present representative is Lord John Hay, Esq. The population of the town at last census was 6,722, the number of inhabited houses 885, the parliamentary constituency 275, and the municipal constituency 90, the annual value of real rental ranging from £16,000 to £17,000. The government of the town is vested in fifteen councillors, from whom are chosen a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer—their jurisdiction, however, is confined to narrow limits, and the amount of their revenue inconsiderable and confined to the rental of market dues, and some curing stations; the harbour dues, with the feus and rental of Pulteneytown, forming the revenue of the British Fisheries' Society; the justice of peace and sheriff's courts, the former sits every alternate Monday; the latter every Tuesday, with power to appoint a sitting when and where within the county. The customs collection extends from Meckle Ferry, to Cape Math, with substations at Thurso and Little Ferry, the number of shipping registered being about 50, or 2,500 tons. Different foreign states are represented by resident vice-consuls.

Their are places of worship both of the establishment and the Free church of Scotland (one of each in Wick and Pulteneytown), and others for congregations of United Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, Cameronians,, and Roman Catholics: the locality of each and their officiating ministers are given in the directory. There are a few good schools, some friendly associations, and one of an agricultural character which holds an important annual cattle show, on Georgemas Hill. The Pulteneytown Academy was founded and endowed by the British Fisheries Society. A good subscription library, and two reading-rooms, are well supported by a number of respectable members; and some other societies exist of an educational tendency. A chambers of commerce comprises the respectable traders in the place. A market is held every Friday, and fairs on the first Tuesday after Palm Sunday, the first Tuesday after the feast of Saint John the Baptist, the first Tuesday after the 21st of July, and the first Tuesday after the 17th of November (old style), but the stock of the district is generally disposed of at trysts held on Georgemas Hill, now rising into into importance as a market-ground.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland, is bounded on the south and west by the Frith of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire: on the east also, it joins, for a short distance, the county of Fife; and a detached portion of Stirlingshire touches part of its northern verge. Its figure, which is extremely irregular, does not exceed nine miles at its greatest length, nor more than six at its extreme breadth.

Anciently the whole of that valuable territory lying between the rivers Forth and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil Hills. was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided amongst the shires of Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the town of Culross. Among the ancient structures of the county are three old towers: one of them, near Clackmannan, is said to have been erected by Robert Bruce; another, contiguous to the Devon Iron Works, is supposed, from its similarity of architecture, to have been built by the same person, or about the same period; the third, the Alloa Tower, is more particularly noticed in the description of that town. From the shore of the Forth, the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil Hills, the highest of which (Bencleugh) attains the height of two thousand feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts, adjacent to the Forth, are rich, arable, and beautifully enclosed. Besides the Forth, the county is watered by two other streams, namely, the Devon and the Black Devon; and it is connected with RAILWAYS by means of a branch from the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee line, communicating with Alloa, Clackmannan and Dollar. A sub-branch runs to to Tillicoultry.

MANUFACTURES, PRODUCE, &c.—The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings, and blankets, has been for many years established in the parishes of Dollar, Tillicoultry, and Alva, with complete success, and the villages belonging to them have become thriving places in consequence, and furnish employment to many hundreds of persons. Throughout the whole district coal is worked, and ironstone, which is abundant, is wrought to advantage.

This shire contains four parishes, and two portions of parishes; its only towns are Alloa and Clackmannan; and its principal villages are Dollar, Alva, and Tillicoultry. The county possesses neither royal or parliamentary burghs, but it unites with KINROSS-SHIRE in returning one member to parliament

(b) Abbey district is wholly entered in the parish of Stirling, Stirlingshire.

The Total Annual Value of Real Property, in Clackmannanshire, as assessed in April, 1815. amounted to £37,978; and the amount assessed to the Property Tax, in 1843, to £51,521. 17s. 1d., and as assessed to the Property and Income Tax, in 1849, £60,125.

ALLOA,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF SAUCHIE, TULLIBODY, MENSTRIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ALLOA is a town of considerable commercial importance, and the capital of its parish; 30 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 32 s. from Perth, 7 from Stirling, the same distance from Dollar, five from Kincardine, and three from Tillicoultry; situated on a branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow railway. for which line there is a station in the town. Alloa was a burgh of barony up to 1854, under the management of trustees; but in February of that year the inhabitants, by a very large majority, adopted the Burgh and Police Act. The town stands on level ground at the base of a gentle declivity, close to the Forth, at the spot where it ceases to be a river and becomes a frith; the water is nevertheless deep enough, for ten miles above this place, to admit vessels of seventy tons. The town has considerably improved of late years; and villas are rising to the west in two lines in rapid succession, adding much to the beauty of the place. The quay stretches along the bank; and large vessels or steamboats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, much to the convenience of passengers, and the more worthy of appreciation, as this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. Of late years the trade of Alloa has greatly increased; and the town and neighbourhood has long been noted for its extensive distilleries, breweries, maltings, glass works ,and collieries, together with several extensive woollen manufactories. There are four branch banking establishments—the Clydesdale Banking Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, together with a bank for savings. Two newspapers are published in Alloa weekly—the 'Advertiser' and the 'Journal.' Immense quantities of whisky are made here for the London market, and the quality and quantity of the ale exceed those of any town in Scotland. About one hundred vessels, of various burthens, belong to Alloa and its adjacent creeks. The exports comprise pig iron, ale, whisky, glass, coal, wool, and woollen goods; the imports are timber, oak, bark, hides, butter, cheese, and large supplies of grain for malting. The latter forms now a principal feature in the imports; large vessels of 600 and 700 tons may be seen discharging here at one time. In the latter end of 1858 a vessel of such large tonnage arrived with grain, that it was found necessary to discharge her in the stream. A daily communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns on the Frith, is afforded by the steam-packets throughout the year; and the ferry steam-boats (on board of which a carriage and four horses may be driven, without either horses or passengers being removed), give every facility to families proceeding to the south side of the river. On the south side of the Forth, opposite to Alloa, are the Alloa Coke Company's Works, established by William Hartley, Esq.; near to which may be seen a beautiful villa, lately erected by that gentleman. The landed proprietor here is Sir Alexander Gibson Maitland. A shipping port is formed at this part of the Forth. The great depth of water, together with the facility of railway transit, show this locality as eminently eligible for the purpose, as is proved by the fact of the large number of vessels daily arriving. The ordinary and small debt courts are held here weekly; a sheriff and a justice of peace courts for the county at stated periods, and a fiars court annually.

The Established Church, which was first opened for divine worship on the 20th of June, 1819, forms the most prominent object in the town. It is a fine structure, in the pointed style of architecture, and was raised at an expense of nearly £7,000. The spire is very handsome, and was added to the tower by public subscription. The Earl of Mar, from his own liberality, considerably improved the interior, by giving a bell and a fine clock. The other places of worship are two Free churches, and one each for the United Presbyterians and Scotch Episcopalians. The last-named occupies a pleasant site to the east of the town, in the midst of tastefully laid out grounds. The educational institutions embrace a charity school, a parochial school, an academy, several Sabbath evening schools, and the Alloa Colliery school. A public assembly room has been long upheld; a library, instituted in 1797, is supported by an annual subscription and entrance fee from each member; a news room, supplied with London and local papers and a bowling-green, give to every class its appropriate portion of rational recreation. In winter two curling clubs, viz., the Alloa club and the Prince of Wales' club, meet on their respective ponds to practice the 'roaring' game of curling. The convivial festival of 'King Crispin' was first celebrated here in 1824, with the customary pomp, pageantry, and ceremonies.

Though Alloa itself possesses few objects of attraction, its immediate neighbourhood presents scenery at once lovely, bold, and picturesque. On the north side is the proud range of the Ochil hills, covered with verdure to their very summits, and are, perhaps, unrivalled in the fascination of Scottish landscape; the south displays the Forth in all its natural splendour, and its borders the embellishments of rural taste. Stirling Castle on the west, and Alloa and Clackmannan Towers on the east, empower the pencil to complete the picture, and present to the eye a panorama of no common brilliancy. The noble and ancient family of Mar have long been the proprietors of this place. They forfeited the earldom by their participation in the ill-digested rebellion of 1715, and the title and privileges were not restored until June, 1824. when the inhabitants, on the welcome intelligence of the resumption of these appanages by their landlord, the late John Francis Earl of Mar (who had endeared himself to his tenantry by a life devoted to the promotion of their happiness and the prosperity of Alloa), celebrated the event by every demonstration of gratitude and joy. Alloa Tower was long the residence of this family. It is a quadrangular building, and though time and the elements are hastening its decay, it is still a place of great strength. The walls are eleven feet thick, and the highest turret is eighty-nine feet. It was built by the sovereiens of Scotland previous to the thirteenth century, and is a stately remnant of feudal grandeur. It has frequently been the resort and residence of royalty. The beautiful and unfortunate Mary spent a portion of her youth and maturity with the Mar family; her son James, also, passed many of his youthful days here, having been committed by his mother to the then Earl of Mar; and his son, Prince Henry, received a part of his education in this tower, under the celebrated George Buchanan. This prospect from the summit is beautiful and extensive, and worthy the attention of the tourist and stranger. The tower is now uninhabited. The present Earl of Mar now resides in a mansion near to the tower, built by himself since he entered into possession of the estates. The market is abundantly supplied with every necessary during the week, and more particularly on Saturday, Cattle fairs are held on the second Wednesday in February, May, August, and November (all new style).

SAUCHIE (New and Old) are populous villages immediately contiguous to each other, in the parish of Alloa, two miles north from that town, on the road to Alva. A great number of colliers, employed in the Mar collieries, reside in these villages, and there are schools in which their children are instructed.

TULLIBODY parish was united to that of Alloa about the time of the Reformation. The ancient kirk of Tullibody was unroofed under circumstances of a peculiar character. In the year 1559 it was made to serve the purpose of a bridge across the Devon for the French troops when they retreated before the English. The church continued in a dismantled condition for upwards of two centuries, when it was again covered in by George Abercrombie, Esq, of Tullibody, and fitted up as a place of worship for the use of this populous district. It is again in disuse, there being erected adjoining a neat and modern edifice.

MENSTRIE is a village in the parish of Logie, and the southern part of Perthshire; situated at the base of the Ochil hills, on the road from Stirling to Dollar, five miles from the former and two from Alva. The manufacture of blankets and different kinds of woollen fabrics give employment to many of the inhabitants.

CLACKMANNAN AND LOGIE

CLACKMANNAN, the capital of its county and likewise of the shire, though not entitled to rank as the latter from either its size, commercial importance, or population, is 32 miles N. W. from Edinburgh, and two from Alloa pleasantly situated on an eminence, gently rising out of a plain from east to west to the height of nearly two hundred feet above the level of the Forth. At one period, this was a town of some consequence; but since the improvement of Alloa, and the superior commercial facilities possessed by that place, Clackmannan has sunk into comparative insignificance: the surrounding scenery, however, is of a very delightful description, and is viewed to great advantage from Clackmannan Tower, which occupies a commanding site a little west of the town. Tradition states that this tower was built by King Robert Bruce, close to which he had his palace, not a vestige of which latter now remains. The tower is eighty feet high and contains a variety of apartments, reached by means of a spiral staircase.

The principal trade is that derived from the coal mines, which supply employment and humble competence to many of the industrious classes. The soil of the parish is considered the richest arable in the shire, and is under the best state of cultivation. It has a shipping port of its own; thousands of tons of coal are yearly shipped at this port. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and one for United presbyterians. The first-mentioned was erected in 1814, at an expense of £4,500, and is a spacious and handsome structure, equal to the accommodation of two thousand persons. The other public institutions are the parochial school, a ladies' school, two other subscription schools, and a society for general religious purposes.

The village of LOGIE is most agreeably situated at the base of the Ochil hills, at the entrance to Sheriff Muir, and presents a singularly pleasing scene of natural beauty; a favourite resort for families, from the large towns, during summer, lodgings being generally full during the season. The kirk, which is small and neat, stands about five miles from Alloa. The parish of Logie, or Blair-Logie, lies partly in the shires of Stirling, Perth, and Clackmannan—the larger portion being on the North bank of the river Forth, opposite Stirling. Within the parish, on a flat peninsula, formed by a sinuosity of the river, the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth abbey presents itself; the plain adjacent was the arena in which Wallace obtained his first open and signal victory over the arms of King Edward. Fairs 4th September for cattle and horses.

POST OFFICE, CLACKMANNAN, Joseph Russell, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from ALLOA) every morning at a quarter past six, and afternoon at half-past twelve; and are despatched thereto at six in the morning, and evening at five.

DOLLAR, ALVA AND TILLICOULTRY,

DOLLAR is a parish and village—the latter an improving little place is 9 miles from Clackmannan and 7 from Alloa; charmingly situated near the eastern extremity, and at the base of the Ochil range of hills, on the road from Kinross, to Stirling, 12 miles from each of those towns. A great proportion of the consequence this village now enjoys is to be ascribed to the establishment and endowment of an academy, by a Mr. M'Nabb, a native of the parish, who having realized a considerable fortune in London, bequeathed a large sum to found an institution in his native district, for the education of young persons. A very handsome edifice was consequently erected in 1819, and masters selected to teach the Latin, Greek, and Oriental languages, together with French and other modern tongues, and mathematics, natural philosophy, geography, English, drawing, writing and arithmetic: female teachers are also connected with the institution. The building is an elegant one, in the Grecian style, with a noble portico, having some pleasant garden ground attached for the use of the students. It accommodates about 400 pupils, many of whom are members of respectable families residing in the neighbourhood, others are boarders from different parts of the kingdom, and the remainder are the children of poor parents belonging to the parish, who as such, are entitled to free instruction and books, many of the latter class after enjoying the advantages of the institution have risen to considerable distinction. About five years ago an Act of Parliament was obtained through the influence of the sheriff of the county, constituting four permanent trustees, and nine others who are qualified by the possession of a certain amount of property in the county, and elected every five years. Previous to the passing of this act the parish minister and kirk session of Dollar were vested with the trusteeship. From the period of the establishment of this institution. Dollar has been fast emancipating itself from the shades of obscurity, and many handsome villas now grace the village and its vicinity; while some well furnished shops and a respectable inn impart to it an appearance highly contrasted with the defects it presented previous to the opening of the academy. At Dollarfield are extensive and old established bleach works, the property of John Haig, Esq.; and in the village is a branch of the Clydesdale Banking Company. In the neighbourhood is the remarkable ruin of Castle Campbell, once the occasional residence of the Argyll family, and which was taken, in 1644, by the Marquis of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock; and in the hill itself is a frightful chasm called the 'Kemp's Score,' which still bears some marks of a staircase. The situation of these relics of former strength and grandeur is highly romantic and interesting, and will amply repay the stranger for turning aside to contemplate both the ruins and the scenery. About four miles from Dollar, are to be seen the celebrated Rumbling bridge, and falls of Devron, which are visited by parties from all parts of the country. A handsome church belonging to the establishment occupies an excellent position at the east end of the village, and a commodious Free church has recently been erected at the west end by the zealous members of that denomination.

ALVA is a thriving village, three miles north from Alloa, two west from Tillicoultry, and five west from Dollar, charmingly situated at the foot of the Ochils, whence issues a stream that turns several mills, and forms, in its course through the romantic and interesting glen of Alva, three beautiful cataracts. The largest of the falls issues from an aperture in the rock above, and tumbles from a height of forty feet in one unbroken mass into a naturally-formed basin below. This parish belongs to Stirlingshire, although locally detached from that county, and surrounded on all sides by Clackmannan. It affords excellent pasture, is in some places well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, such as silver, copper, iron, and lead. Sir John Erskine, of Alva, about the year 1715, assisted by some miners from Leadhills, discovered a very rich vein of silver, in a romantic glen, about midway between Alva House, and the village. The precious metal made its appearance in small threads, which, upon being followed, led to a very rich mass of ore; some of it was so rich, that fourteen ounces of ore yielded twelve ounces of silver. So easily was the deposit of treasure reached that not more than £50 sterling had been expended on it when the prize was found; and during a space of little more than three months, it is said, that ore was obtained, from which Sir John drew from £40,000 to £50,000 besides what the workmen dishonestly appropriated to themselves. After this mass was exhausted the ore became so scarce as not to repay the expense of working, and hence the enterprise was abandoned. The district also abounds with coal, which is wrought to a great extent by the Alloa Coal Company, and vast quantities are shipped to distant parts. The manufacture of woollen goods, consisting of fancy plaids, shawls, tartans, &c. is carried on in the village and its neighbourhood very extensively, and numerous hands find busy employment in the different mills—these with their tall red chimneys exhibit an interesting contrast with the lofty Ochils and the surrounding plain. Though now somewhat out-stripped in the field of commercial enterprise by its more spirited neighbour Tillicoultry, Alva yet far surpasses some of the Scottish burghs for its mercantile activity and importance. In the village is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland. The 'House of Alva,' the residence of a respectable branch of the family of Johnstone, stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Wood-Hill, about two hundred and twenty feet above the bed of the Devon, which flows westward to join the Forth in the valley below, and fourteen hundred below the apex of the mountain. From the summit, which rises to an elevation of 1,770 feet above sea level, the eye sweeps over an immense range of picturesque and interesting scenery, stretching all the way from the German ocean on the east to the Campsie hills, on the west, and includes among other attractive objects, the Lammermuir chain, the Bass Rock, Edinburgh, Arthur's seat, the Pentland hills, and the lovely and classic windings of the Forth. Perhaps the most interesting object for an antiquarian in the whole parish of Alva would be the well of St. Leif, or Lewanus — the tutelar Saint of the district, which continues to to pour out its bright and sweet waters in the minister's glebe at a little distance from the parish church.

TILLICOULTRY, a manufacturing village, two miles east of Alva, and three west of Dollar; is pleasantly situated on the side of the Ochil Hills, and on the road from Stirling to Kinross—nine miles from the former, and fifteen from the latter town. A branch of the Dumferline and Stirling railway runs between Alloa, and the village, and a parliamentary bill has been obtained for the formation of a railway, between it and the county town of Kinross. It is well supplied with excellent water from a stream that issues from the hills immediately behind the village. The river Devon, when not far from its source, and when flowing eastward, forms the northern boundary of the parish of Tillicoultry; and, after pursuing a circuitious course of about 14 miles beyond the parish, again enters it running westward, and cuts its arable plain into two nearly equal parts. The village of Tillicoultry is rapidly rising into a place of considerable importance from the woollen manufacture, established here, and likewise at DEVONSIDE, chiefly for making shawls, fancy plaids, clan tartans, tweeds, &c. and at the Great Exhibition of 1851, the Messrs Paton, of this village, carried off the first prize for the finest woollen shawls manufactured in Great Britain. In these branches the village and its neighbourhood, furnish employment to a very large number of the industrious class; some of the mills supporting between nine hundred and a thousand persons. Though recognized only as a village, yet Tillicoultry considerably exceeds, in size, and far exceeds in commercial enterprise and importance, very many of the Scottish burghs, and the same remark with nearly equal propriety, may be applied to its neighbour Alva. Branches of the Clydesdale Banking Company, and the Union Bank of Scotland, and a bank for savings are established in the village; and subscriptions are being raised with the design of erecting a Mechanics Institute. The parish abounds with coal, which is profitably worked, and there is a good quarry of freestone. The scenery of this neighbourhood is as interesting as that in any other part of this charming little county. Bencleuch, the loftiest of the Ochils, rises directly to north of the village, to the height of two thousand three hundred feet above the level of the sea. The view from the summit of this mountain is very grand and extensive. The hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals; and about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London Company: the metal sold at £50 per ton, but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned as unprofitable. The principal antiquities are the ruins of a circular building on a steep and rugged basaltic eminence which rises to the north of the village, and the remains of a druidical circle on the south end of a rising ground lying to the east of it, called Cuninghar. The places of worship are a church of the establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and one belonging to a congregation of the Evangelical Union, there is an excellent parish school in the village, which is well attended, and also several private schools, all well conducted, and attended by a considerable number of pupils.

DUMBARTONSHIRE,

ANCIENTLY designated LENNOX, and subsequently Dun-bartonshire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. On the west it is separated from Argyleshire by Loch Long; Perthshire touches its northern extremity; the county of Stirling bounds it on the east, and also on the north; Lanarkshire on the south-east; and the Clyde separates it from the county of Renfrew on the south. The figure of this county is rather singular: it describes almost a perfect crescent or semicircle, protruding on the south and south-west—its concavity being filled, through its whole extent, on the north and north-east, by the county of Stirling. The distance between its eastern and northern extremities is nearly forty miles; while the breadth of the shire is from five to thirteen, and in one part it is only two miles broad. The parishes of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling. This severed portion of the county is twelve miles long, by from two to four and a half miles broad, and was annexed to the district in the reign of Robert I. Altogether the shire comprises two hundred and sixty-one square miles: between fifty and sixty thousand acres are cultivated, and the remainder are mostly pastoral hills, woods, and lakes—of the latter there are about thirty-one square miles.

NAME and EARLY HISTORY.—In ancient times the appellation of the shire was Levenach, signifying 'the country of the Leven,' which was corrupted in the course of years to Levenax, and more latterly to Lennox. Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the Attacottie, or Eithacocti, a word importing 'dwellers along the extremity of the wood.' The descendants of this people were not enslaved, or expelled from their hunting grounds, by the Romans: they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde; and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbartonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying 'the hill of the Britons.' This region, until the early part of the last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior; and were finally extirpated, or reduced to quiescence and subordination, only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom, called Alwyn, the son of Arkil, was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion, and his descendants for several centuries were at once heritable sheriffs of the county and chief possessors of its lands. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1672, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, devolved upon Charles II, as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In recent times great improvements have been effected in this county, and every year its prolificacy and value are increasing in amount. The soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber, the district now wears a warmer and more cheerful aspect than formerly, while the income accruing from produce has been in a corresponding degree augmented. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the county; the dairy has become an object of attention and profit on most farms. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved within the last fifty years, a measure highly conducive to the agricultural and manufacturing interests. A century has elapsed since the manufacturing dawn broke upon this part of Scotland; bleach-fields, about that period, made their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven. About 1768 the first print-works were established on the Leven; soon afterwards others sprung into operation, and at this time there are various manufactures carried on throughout the shire. Ship-building, both iron and wood, is a branch of great importance, and is carried on with spirit at Dumbarton. Until 1831 the glass-works of this county were in high repute, Dumbarton being their chief seat; but they have now ceased to exist. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous mineral treasures within its bosom; but it has an abundance of freestone and slate, and some ironstone.

MOUNTAINS and LAKES.—These are the most remarkable objects in the county: of the former, the chief are those of Arrochar, Luss, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough, and abound with moors, mosses, and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are much less elevated: Benvoirlich, adjoining Perthshire, has the highest altitude, rising 3,330 feet above the level of the sea. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amidst the clouds: some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton Castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs; among these are Loch Long and Loch Gare, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive, and, perhaps, the most beautiful lake in Scotland, is that of Loch Lomond: it lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them, or like fragments torn off by some violent convulsion of nature. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque: on Inch Cailoch (or the Island of Nuns) are the remains of a conventual church; and on Inch Murrins (or the Island of Saint Murrinus), two miles long, and converted into a deer-park, are the ruins of a house once belonging to the Lennox family. This magnificent expanse of water is thirty miles long, in some places, eight broad, and covers a surface of 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms; it abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon: the purity of the stream and the richness of its banks sooth the mind of the traveller; while the bleach-fields, print-works and cotton mills, the villages, hamlets and gentlemen's seats, scattered over an apparently remote district, must impress him with an exalted idea of the industry and wealth of the inhabitants. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district. The Dumbartonshire railway a branch from the Edinburgh and Glasgow line, possesses stations at Dumbarton, Helensburgh, and Balloch, and the Edinburgh and Glasgow line has stations at Castle Cary and Kirkintilloch.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Dumbartonshire is divided into twelve parishes, ten of which form the presbytery of Dumbarton; it contains but one royal burgh—Dumbarton, four burghs of barony, and three villages. The only contributory burgh, or that which, in conjunction with others, is represented in the senate, belonging to the county is Dumbarton; it unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock, and Port Glasgow, in returning one member to the Imperial parliament.

BONHILL, ALEXANDRIA, BALLOCH, RENTON,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BONHILL is a thriving little town, in the parish of its name, 61 miles W. of Edinburgh, 18 N.W. from Glasgow, 3 N. from Dumbarton, and within one mile f the beautiful and celebrated Loch Lomond; situated n the east side of the Leven, and connected with ALEXANDRIA by an iron suspension bridge. Very considerable business is done here in calico printing; and it is altogether a prosperous little place. The town consists of one long and tolerably well built street; about the centre of it, on the margin of the Leven, stands the parish church, a fine building of Gothic architecture, with a square tower containing a handsome clock; it was finished in 1836, at an expense of nearly £3,000, and contains about twelve hundred sittings. A Free church, erected in 1844, is an elegant building of red freestone, with a tapering spire; it occupies a commanding site, a little to the south of the parish church. On a gentle eminence near the new bridge, is an United Presbyterian church, erected in 1830; and about a mile north of the town, at the small village of JAMESTOWN, is the parish school. There is also a subscription school in the town, which was erected in 1790, and a society which provides education for children whose parents are not in a condition to secure such advantage for them. In 1836, a fine suspension bridge of iron, was thrown over the Leven: the span is 438 feet, and it cost, with the approaches, £2,200, which was defrayed by Captain Smollett, Esq, of Bonhill. It was erected by Mr. C. Atherton of Glasgow, civil engineer. The land on both sides of the Leven is in a high state of cultivation, which, together with respectable residences, and recent improvements and erections, impart to this place an appearance highly prepossessing. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February, for horses.

About a mile north-west from Bonhill, at the south end of Loch Lomond, is BALLOCH, which contains a good inn, and is the terminus of the Dumbartonshire, and Forth of Clyde Railways. In 1842, Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, erected an elegant suspension bridge across the Leven water; previous to which, passengers were greatly inconvenienced by the ferry then in use. This bridge is twenty miles from Glasgow by Renton and Dumbarton, but by avoiding the latter place and passing through Bonhill, the distance is reduced to eighteen miles. A fair is held at Balloch, on the 15th of September, for the sale of horses.

ALEXANDRIA is an increasing and considerable village, on the east side of the Leven, opposite to Bonhill; on the banks of the river, are several extensive print works. Its site is more commanding than that of Bonhill, and its situation both healthful and pleasant. There are four schools in the village, all are well conducted institutions. About a mile from the village stands Tullichewin Castle, a noble edifice, the residence of William Campbell, Esq, from which an extensive view of the river, and of the vale through which it winds, is obtained. Between this seat and Alexandria, is the neat mansion of Broomley, which is also the property of the same gentleman; and two miles distant is Cameron House, the tasteful seat of Alexander Smollett, Esq. M.P. of Bonhill. The places of worship here, are one of the Establishment, a Free church, and a chapel each for the United Presbyterians, Independents, and Roman Catholics. A fair is held here on the first Thursday of February.

RENTON is also a large village, in the parish of Cardross, one mile S.W. from Bonhill, the like distance S. from Alexandria, and 2 N. from Dumbarton; most eligibly situated on the west bank of the Leven, which winds with much beauty below the village, and on its banks are two extensive print works. In the immediate neighbourhood of Renton, is the old mansion house of Dalquburn, in which, the celebrated historian and novelist Tobias Smollett, was born. A monumental column, bearing a latin inscription, is here erected to his memory; it is a round pillar of stone work, sixty feet in height, springing from a square base. This memorial was erected by the descendants of that talented individual. In the village is an Established church, two Free churches, and one belonging to the Reformed Presbyterians.

CUMBERNAULD, CONDORRET, & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMBERNAULD is an ancient village in the parish of its name; 33 miles W. from Edinburgh, 29 E. from Dumbarton, 14 N.E. from Glasgow, 13 S. from Stirling 9 W. from Falkirk, 7 E. from Kirkintilloch, and 7 N. from Airdrie; situate on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh through Falkirk, about two miles south of the Forth and Clyde canal, and the line of railway between Edinburgh and Glasgow. The principal business is the weaving of checks, and other striped cotton fabrics, by hand-loom, for the Glasgow manufacturers; and in the neighbourhood are several coal and lime works, and a quarry of good freestone. The parish church is at the west end of the village, occupying a commanding site, and embosomed amongst trees. Cumbernauld possesses a good public library and subscription news-room. The country around the village is well wooded, and agreeably varied with gentle eminences and rural dales. The principal mansion in the parish is Cumbernauld House, belonging to Capt. Fleming. The annual fair is held on the second Thursday in May, for cattle and horses.

CONDORRET is a small village in the parish of, an about three miles west from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are chiefly employed at the hand-loom, in weaving checks and lappet muslins for the manufacturing Glasgow houses.

DUMBARTON,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CARDROSS AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMBARTON is a royal burgh and sea-port, the capital of the county and of the parish to which it gives name; 59 miles w. from Edinburgh, 15 N.W. from Glasgow, 8 S.E. from Helensburgh, and 3 S. from Bonhill; situate on a low piece of ground, encompassed on its western quarter by the Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening castle of Dumbarton, which stands on a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Frith, about half a mile from the town. The rock of Dumbarton measures a mile in circumference at its base, diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cloven into two summits, one higher than the other, these are almost perpendicular, and rise to the height of more than three hundred feet. The fortress is entered by a gate at the bottom, and within the rampart which defends the entrance is the guardhouse and lodging for the officers; from hence the ascent is by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides; here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, and a reservoir always filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde; its defences are kept in constant repair, and it is garrisoned by a limited body of soldiers and fuctionaries. The house of the governor is injudiciously placed in the cleft of the rock, and erected in a style quite out of character with the picturesque outlines of the precipice. Some parts of the rock are magnetic, and from the crevices there grow a profusion of wild plants, amongst which appropriately predominates the Scotch thistle, now an exceedingly rare production in its natural state The rock of Dumbarton has been occupied by works of a warlike character throughout the successive dynasties of eighteen hundred years, and consequently is the most ancient stronghold in the country of which any record or tradition is preserved. In Bede's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and taken by escalade in 1571; at other periods it has sustained sieges and assaults which our space will not permit us to detail.

Dumbarton suffered severely from an inundation of the rivers Clyde and Leven some time prior to 1607, for in that year parliament granted the inhabitants 37,000 merks Scottish for raising bulwarks to prevent a similar calamity, with a cession of all the recovered lands. The present town is chiefly composed of one main street, lying in a semicircular form round the head or west end of the peninsula, there are some bye thoroughfare lanes and detached houses, and a suburb on the west side of the Leven, leading to Renton; it is connected with the latter by a good stone bridge of five arches, reaching three hundred feet in length. The waters of the Leven form a commodious harbour, and to promote the facility of trade an excellent quay and capacious dock have been constructed, principally at the expense of the late James Lang, Esq., a considerable proprietor in the vicinity; the streets and principal shops are lighted with gas, by a company formed in 1832. Dumbarton was long famed for the manufacture of crown glass; but that branch was extinguished by the death, in 1831, of all the principal proprietors of the works. The discontinuance of this source of industry and emolument was severely felt by the inhabitants, and proved a serious drawback upon the previous prosperity of the town—as may be evinced by the fact that, when these works were in active operation, they furnished labour to three hundred workmen, and annually consumed 15,000 tons of coal, besides employing 10,000 tons of shipping—and paid from £40,000 to £50,000 excise duties per annum: the property lately passed into other hands, and an engineering establishment is now erected by Messrs. Tulloch and Denny, on a portion of the premises. The principal trade, and on which the prosperity of the town chiefly depends is that of ship building, which is carried on here extensively and with great spirit, and for which there are five extensive yards, three being exclusively for the construction of iron ships; and, perhaps, no other town in Britain can surpass Dumbarton in this line of business. Brewing, tanning, iron-founding and rope making, are also carried on to a limited extent. In the High street there is a superior hotel, the 'Elephant,' and in the same street is a branch establishment of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and another of the 'Union Bank of Scotland.' Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II, in the year 1221; and its privileges (including the right of fishing in the Leven), were confirmed by a charter from James VI, in 1609. The municipal government is vested in a provost, two baillies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and ten councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Thursday during session, the sheriff small debt court every alternate Thursday, and the burgh court sits (if necessary) on Mondays and Wednesdays during session. The burgh unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock, and Port Glasgow in returning one member to parliament. The County and Burgh buildings were completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £5,000; they form a noble structure, and contain convenient court-rooms, with every suitable office, and a handsome assembly-room; the goal is placed at the rear of the court house.

At the east end of High-street stands the parish church, a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock; the erection was perfected in 1811, at a cost of £6,000. The other places of worship are a Free church, two United Presbyterian chapels, one for Roman Catholics, and a Baptist meeting-house. All that now remains of the ancient collegiate church, founded in 1450, by Isabella, Duchess of Albany, and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to St. Patrick, is one of the tower arches which is being removed and placed at the entrance of the Burgh school, in Church-street, the original site being required for the formation of the Dumbartonshire railway, which passes in the immediate vicinity of this once extensive pile. The principal educational establishment is the Burgh Grammar School—a truly eminent institution of long standing. There are some other well conducted instructional foundations in the town, including a Free church school, an Industrial school, and some private day schools. The first number of the 'Dumbarton Herald,' a weekly newspaper of considerable merit, was published on the 25th September, 1851, by the enterprising proprietor Mr. Samuel Bennett, its circulation has been gradually on the increase; it has now more than double the number of subscribers it had two or three years ago. A mechanics institute, situate in High-street, contains a good circulating library, and in the same street is a respectable news and reading-room. The markets, entitled to be holden on Tuesdays and Fridays, are now but thinly attended; the fairs are of much greater importance; they are held on the third Tuesday of March, the Thursday next before Easter, the third Tuesday in May, and the second Tuesday in August, besides a very large cattle fair held on Carman moor on the first Wednesday in June.

CARDROSS is a small but respectable village in the parish of its name, situate four miles from Dumbarton on the road to Helensburgh, and near the shore of the Clyde. Prior to the reformation, the church of Cardross was a rectory, belonging to the cathedral of Glasgow, and was seated on a peninsular promontory formed by the Leven and the Clyde; the present church, which stands in the village, is a neat edifice with a square tower. This district is very populous, and the situation of the parish eligible for business, pleasant and salubrious. The vicinage of the village is the residence of many respectable families, whose tasteful mansions embellish the surrounding scenery.

HELENSBURGH WITH ROW, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony, and sea-port in the parish of Row; 23 miles W.N.W. from Glasgow, 9 S. from Luss, and 8 N.W. from Dumbarton; lying on the Firth of Clyde, opposite to Greenock, from which it is five miles distant. The town, which is a perpetual feu from Sir Jas. Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, was commenced in 1777, and since that period it has risen into notice as the most convenient and agreeable sea-bathing place on the Clyde: it now consists of a series of handsome houses and streets, laid out on a neat and approved plan. The accommodations for visitors are equal to those of most bathing places; numerous private houses are well furnished for the reception of families, or individuals resorting hither in the summer, and there are two superior hotels, hot, cold, and shower baths, a public library, &c. The quay, erected in 1817, extends from the centre of the town a considerable distance into the river; but, being low, a great portion of it is covered at high water; improvements are in rapid progress however, which, when effected, will obviate this inconvenience. About a mile and a half west of the town, at the entrance of the Gare Loch, an excellent and substantial new quay has been constructed by Sir Jas. Colquhoun. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of a burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in a provost, two baillies, and four of the town council.

The places of worship are the parish church at Row, two miles west of the town, and one under the Establishment in Clyde street, Episcopal and Free churches and chapels for United Presbyterians, Independents, and Baptists. A parochial, a Free church, and industrial school, with two or three respectable boarding academies, are amongst the educational establishments in the town and parish.

At the distance of two miles, in a westerly direction, is Roseneath Castle, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Argyle; this noble edifice stands on the opposite side of Loch Gare, and is well worth the stranger's notice. Opposite Roseneath, on the north-west bank of the loch, is situate Ardencaple Castle, the residence of the Dowager Duchess of Argyle, commanding a fine view of the Clyde and Gare Loch, which flows between these splendid mansions to a distance of seven miles into the main land; and in the vicinage of the town, especially at its eastern end, near the banks of the Clyde, are several handsome seats and residences. In the immediate neighbourhood of Helensburgh, resided for twenty-five years the celebrated and scientific Henry Bell, to whose fertile and persevering genius, Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels; the first trip ever made by steamboat, in this division of the globe, was from Port Glasgow to Helensburgh, by the Comet, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was a millwright and engineer; he was born in the parish of Torphichen, county of Linlithgow, April 7th, 1767; died at his house (the Baths Inn), in Helensburgh, November 14th, 1830, and was nterred in the parish church-yard of Row, without a memorial commemorative of the inestimable benefits onferred by him upon his species, by rendering subervient to the use of man that stupendous power which now successfully 'combats the fickle wind and stems he flowing tide.' A fair is held here on the second Wednesday in November, for cattle; the fairs formerly held on the 1st of June and 6th of August, are disconinued, though authorized by charter.

The parish of Row, to which the above town of Helensburgh belongs, is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character; the low grounds are adjacent to the Clyde, and are fertile and beautiful. The parish church stands near the ferry across Gare Loch to the peninsula of Roseneath; opposite it is a point projecting into the loch, and it is supposed that from this circumstance the name of the parish is derived—the word row signifying a point. The parish (exclusive of a narrow stripe on Loch Long), is about ten miles in length by four in breadth; bounded by Luss on the east, Cardross on the south-east, on the west by Gare Loch, and its south end is washed by the Firth of Clyde.

POST OFFICE, HELENSBURGH, John Hunter, Post Master.—Letters from GLASGOW, and all parts, arrive every morning at half-past three, at twelve noon, and five in the evening; and are despatched thereto, every morning at nine, afternoon at half-past one, and evening at a quarter-past four.

Letters from DUMBARTON, arrive every morning at half-past three, and evening at five; and are despatched thereto, every afternoon at half-past one, and in the evening at five.

On Sundays—Letters from GLASGOW arrive every morning at half-past three; and are despatched thereto, in the afternoon at three.

Letters from DUMBARTON, arrive in the morning at half-past three; and are despatched thereto, in the afternoon at three. Money Orders granted and paid here.

KILPATRICK, DUNTOCHER, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILPATRICK is a post village in the parish of its name, 53 miles W. from Edinburgh, 10 W. from Glasgow, and 5 E. from Dumbarton; situated on the road between the two last-named towns, and occupying a pleasant site at the foot of a hilly country, in view of the Clyde. The name Kilpatrick signifies the 'church of Patrick,' but in this instance tradition varies from fact—the former authority stating it to be the 'cell,' while the latter proves the definition just given to be proper, for Patrick never was an anchorite; it is generally supposed, however, that this parish was the birthplace of the celebrated titular saint of Ireland: the traditionary record asserts that, at the age of sixteen this individual was carried off from this then civilized Roman district by a band of Irish marauders, who made a descent upon this part of the coast, and with other captives subjected to slavery in their own comparatively barbarous country; but the 'Ecclesia Hibernica' distinctly states that he voluntarily landed on the northern shore of Ireland in the year 461, after a residence of twenty-six years in the Roman capital: the visit strengthed the connexion that had priorily existed between the two nations. Within its limited locality the village has not the advantage of any manufactory. At LITTLE-MILL, a mile to the west, is a distillery and a ship-building yard; and situated on a declivity, commanding an extensive and beautiful view of the Clyde and adjacent country, is Milton House and print works, the residence and property of Messrs. Muter and Millar.

At the entrance of the village from Dumbarton stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a handsome square tower and clock, erected in 1812. At the east end of the village is a Free church and an United Presbyterian chapel, together with a Parochial school. At DUNGLASS, a mile and a half to the west, are to be seen the ruins of an old fortification or Roman boundary, and at BOWLING-BAY, about midway between Dunglass and Kilpatrick, commences the Forth and Clyde canal, which, after thirty-nine miles eastern traverse, empties itself into the Forth at Grangemouth, thus connecting the German ocean with the western channel: this great work was begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th of July, 1790; vessels drawing eight feet water, having a nineteen feet beam and a seventy-three feet keel, can navigate this noble national junction.

DUNTOCHER is a considerable village, until lately forming part of the parish of Kilpatrick, but now a separate ecclesiastical district; it is situated two miles north from Kilpatrick, and contains four large mills for spinning and manufacturing cotton, together with coal and lime works—all called into operation by the spirit and enterprise of the late William Dunn, Esq. of Duntocher, and still kept in active operation by Alex. Dunn, Esq. of Duntocher, under the supervision of Mr. John Macindoe; there is also a manufactory for spades and shovels. The principal part of the town (for its size and population entitle it to the rank), which belongs to Mr. Dunn, is lighted with gas, from works established by that gentleman, who is the largest heritor in the parish. The church of the new parish was erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,700; the other places of worship are a Free church and two United Presbyterian chapels. Perhaps the most ancient bridge in Scotland exists here; a stone near to it bears the following inscription:—

'PONTEM. HUNC. EXIT.
RUI. CURAVIT. IMP. T.
ÆL. ANTONIN. HADR.
AUG. P. P. QUINT. LOLL.
URBIC. LEG. FERE. COL-
LAPSUM. RESTITUIT.
DOMINUS DE BLANT-
IRE, A. ÆR. CHR.
M.D.CC.LXXII.'

which is thus translated—'This bridge was built under the auspices of the Emperor Titus Ælius Antoninus Hadrianus Augustus, father of his country, by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant, being almost ruinous, it was restored by Lord Blantyre in the year 1772. A little above the bridge there was a fort and watch-tower visible when Pennant visited this quarter in 1772, but no vestage of them now remains.

KIRKINTILLOCH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KIRKINTILLOCH (or Kirkintulloch) is an ancient and thriving manufacturing town, burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, 40 miles W. from Edinburgh, 20 S.S.W. from Stirling, 16 E. from Dumbarton, the like distance W. from Falkirk, 7 N. from Glasgow, the like distance W. from Cumbernauld, 5 S.W. from Kilsyth, and 3 S.E. from Campsie. It is situated on the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin; and is understood to derive its name from the locality, the original designation being Caer-pentulloch, signifying, in Cambro-British, the fort on the head or end of the hill, which is descriptive of the site of the town, standing as it does on the verge of a ridge, advancing from the south into a plain on the banks of the Kelvin The wall of Antoninus passed through this town, and one of his principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little south-west of the parish church; the site of the fortress is even to this day recognised by a deep moat called 'Peel.' Kirkintilloch, (which is the largest parish in the shire), and the neighbouring parish of Cumbernauld are separated from the rest of the county by the north point of Lanarkshire, and are surrounded by that county and Stirlingshire. The weaving of lappet muslin is carried on here to a great extent by the hand loom, in which the majority of the inhabitants are employed. There are also hats made here for the Glasgow market: print and bleach works, an iron foundry, and several manufactories are in the neighbourhood. The monetary transactions of the burgh are facilitated by branches of the City of Glasgow Bank, and the National Bank of Scotland, and also a branch of the National Security Savings Bank.

Few places possess more eligible advantages for inland conveyance than this; that great undertaking the Forth and Clyde canal passing through the town, affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coast of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch Railway, opened in the spring of 1826, and which extends to Airdrie, joining the Ballochnie railway about a mile from that town, is within six miles; this line also joins the Garnkirk and Glasgow railway. In 1835 about 40,000 tons of coal, and 3,325 tons of pig iron were shipped on this canal from this railway, besides the consumption of the neighbourhood, which amounts to about 16,000 tons of coal from the railway alone. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line passes over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, a mile and a half south of the town, and at this place is known as the 'Campsie Junction.' Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony; its first charter was conferred by William the Lion, dated at Forres; it was granted to William Cumming, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town is governed by two baillies and twelve councillors, elected by the burgesses, about thirty-three in number. The baillies possess the power of deciding in all causes within the liberty of the burgh, equal to the right exercised by sheriffs of counties. The town has a police establishment, under the regulation of commissioners appointed by the provisions of the local act of parliament for the government of small towns. Gas works have been erected by the commissioners for lighting the town. The court-house and jail, which form a substantial building, at the cross, is ornamented with a fine spire containing a clock. A justice of peace court is held once a month—on Saturday; and a burgh court every Saturday.

The parish church, which was built in 1644, and is in the form of a cross, stands near the centre of the town. The other places of worship comprise two Free churches, a chapel of ease, erected by subscription in 1807, an original Burgher chapel, an United Presbyterian chapel, and a Methodist meeting-house. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, the last Thursday in July (old style), both for cattle; and October 20th for cattle and horses.

POST OFFICE, John Young, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive from GLASGOW every morning (Sundays excepted), at seven, evening at five, and are despatched thereto every morning at nine evening at six.

Money Orders granted and paid here.

LUSS, ARROCHAR, TARBET AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LUSS is a small romantic village, in the parish of its name, 12 miles W.N.W. from Edinburgh, 28 N.W. from Glasgow, 31 S.E. from Inveraray, 13 N.N.W. from Dumbarton, 10 N.N.W. from Bonhill, and 9 N. from Helensburgh; most delightfully situated on the western margin of the justly-famed Loch Lomond. The only business of consequence is the Camstraddan and Luss slate quarries, from which considerable quantities of excellent blue slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country, by means of small sailing vessels on Loch Lomond and down the river Leven. The parish school is an excellently conducted institution. If healthfulness of situation and beauty of scenery be desirable, few places possess equal advantages with Luss; but that which renders it a place of paramount interest is the noble Loch, on the margin of whose pellucid waters it reposes, surrounded by some of the most inviting and delightful scenery in Scotland. In summer, the numerous pleasure parties crowding here impart a gaiety of appearance to the lake, which, if possible, heightens the interest of this charming spot. Steam-boats sail every day (Sunday excepted) from the south end of the loch, calling at Luss, Tarbert, Inversnaid, the foot of Ben Lomond, &c., returning the same afternoon. Here resided the Rev. and learned Dr. Stuart, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic language: and on the opposite side of the loch, near Drymen, lived for a considerable time, Lord Napier, the inventor of logarithms. A fine view of Loch Lomond, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Stronehill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. About 2½ miles south from Luss is Rossdhu House, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss. It is a handsome building, with a fine portico, seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The church was dedicated to St. Mackessog, a native of Lennox, who was a bishop and confessor, and suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large cairn of stones was raised to his memory. He was buried in the parish church, and was long regarded as the tutelar saint of this part of the country.

ARROCHAR (more properly Arroquhar) is a parish lying between Loch Lomond and Loch Long, bounded on the south by Luss. It extends nearly sixteen miles in length by three in breadth. The village, which is situated at the head of Loch Long, is ten miles north from Luss, and about one and a half west from Tarbet. It contains two good hotels, well known to travellers in this mountainous and romantic district

TARBET is a much famed inn and small village, on Loch Lomond, about eight miles north from Luss, and to distinguish it from Tarbert, on Loch Fine, in Argyleshire, is generally designated Tarbet on Loch Lomond. This place, which is much visited by tourists, is considered the most pleasing and romantic spot on Loch Lomond, and Ben Arthur, or 'the Cobbler,' is best seen near to the inn. The distance between Loch Lomond and Loch Long is here about one mile and a half, and the arrangements for conveyance in summer are such, that a person may leave Glasgow, proceed by rail to Balloch, embark in the Loch Lomond steamer, and sail to Tarbet, walk or ride across the isthmus to Arrochar, where a steamer is ready to start again for Glasgow, down Loch Long and up the Clyde.

NEW KILPATRICK, MILNGAVIE & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

New (or East) Kilpatrick is a parish partly in this county, and partly in that of Stirlingshire; its extent is upwards of six miles from north to south, by a breadth of from two to four miles. The Forth and Clyde canal intersects it in its northern part, entering the district, on crossing the Kelvin, by a stupendous aqueduct bridge. The district was separated from Old Kilpatrick, which bounds the parish on the west, in the year 1649. The church is six miles north-west from Glasgow, and is a neat building, erected in 1807. Garscube House, the residence of Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, is the principal seat in the neighbourhood, worthy of notice.

Milngavie (popularly Millguy) is a thriving manufacturing village, and the principal one in the parish of New Kilpatrick, but locally situated on the border of Stirling county, 12 miles E. from Dumbarton, 5 E. from Duntocher, 2½ S.W. from Stirling, 7 N.N.W. from Glasgow, 51 W. from Edinburgh, and 2 miles from New Kilpatrick. In the village is an extensive mill for cotton spinning, and large print-work establishments; and in the neighbourhood are several bleach fields, and a distillery. There is an United Presbyterian Church, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a chapel of ease, the parish church is two miles to the south. The country around is finely diversified with hill and dale, and ornamented with many respectable family mansions. At Mugdock Castle, 2½ miles north, is a remarkable echo: also a small beautiful loch, on the margin of which is an eminence, crowned with an observatory. There is a druidical temple about 3 miles N.E., on Craigmaddie moor, near the remains of Craigmaddie Castle, called the 'Old Wife's Lifts'; it consists of three immense stones, two of which are erect and support the third.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

THIS is a large and important shire, in the south of Scotland; bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk; on the north-west by Ayrshire; on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcudbright; on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Frith, and its south-eastern base is skirted by Roxburghshire and the English county of Cumberland. The length of the county, from north-west to south-east, is nearly fifty-five miles; and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peeblesshire on the north, is nearly thirty miles. According to the latest and best surveys, it embraces an area of one thousand, two hundred and twenty eight square miles, or seven hundred and eighty-five thousand, nine hundred and twenty statute acres of land, and about ten square miles of lakes.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the Selgovæ, who spread themselves as far as the banks of the Dee, in Galloway: these people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries; during the lapse of this time, however, immense swarms of adventurers from Ireland and Cantyre effected a settlement: and from these intermixtures sprung the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cumbria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother David, who encouraged the cupidity of many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the country was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire and Cumberland, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursions and reckless feudal hostility. When the civil war broke out under Charles I, the common people entered heartily into the covenant, and the shire was disturbed by the exertions made by the loyal noblemen and gentlemen in quelling the insurrections. Attachment to the house of Stuart ruined several of the great families: and humbler causes have conspired to extinguish many names of great local interest. The Maxwells were competely ruined by the attainder of the Earl of Nithsdale in 1715. The Douglasses of Queensberry, and the Johnstons of Annandale, have merged in other families, and out of the general wreck the noble house of Buccleuch has risen to the greatest prosperity and influence of any family in the south of Scotland. From being thus so frequently subjected to the horrors of early invasion and predatory warfare, and being so partitioned into baronies, the shire exhibits, even to this day, the remains of some very important castles and places of security.

SOIL and SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow, or white sandstone, which dips generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The limestone of the shire has been of great value in improving the lands; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions: marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes; and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanlock head, there are inexhaustable mines of lead As in most districts of the south of Scotland, there is a very general mixture of arable and pasture land. The upper part of the shire, or Annandale, Eskdale, and Ewesdale, is principally devoted to sheep-feeding, in the lower portion the farms are larger, and more adapted to agriculture; the plantations and pleasure grounds are consequently more numerous, and are remarkable for their beauty and richness.

The following are the principal eminences in Dumfries-shire, with their altitude above the level of the sea:—

In Annandale the improvement of the breed of cattle has been most apparent; at the Highland Society's meetings some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers, and bullocks are exhibited. The number of oxen, sheep, and pigs nurtured in this county are invariably more than adequate to the demands of its population; an exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place—and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides, and skins. The condition of the county is represented as having been greatly improved within the last fifty years, and at present its affairs may be considered in as prosperous a state as those of any other district of Scotland. Dumfries-shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county; the principal branches under this head are the manufacture of hosiery goods and cotton spinning; the chief seat of the former is limited to the capital of the county—the latter to the town of Annan.

RIVERS, &c.—The chief, indeed the only rivers of consequence, are the Nith, the Annan, and the Esk: from these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the waters that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale, and Ewesdale. The Nith rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsoncone hill, in the parish of Kirkconnel, and descends into the valley of Sanquhar; having forced its way through the hills which surround this valley, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchan from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith, a little above Dumfries, a short distance southward from which, the latter river empties itself into the Solway Frith. Near to Jarborough castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds, called

'Bow-butts,' where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practice archery. The river Annan (as well as the Tweed and Clyde), takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of twenty-three miles; in this course it receives the Evan and Moffat waters, and the Wamphray stream; which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name: passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Loch Maven it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous: the Esk, in its progress through this district, is joined by the Black Esk, the Meggot, the Ewes, and the Wauchope—(almost the whole of this division belongs to the noble family of Buccleugh): after reaching Broomholm, the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Frith; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddal from Roxburghshire, and the Line water from the county of Cumberland: the entire length of its race is about thirty-eight miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries receiving in Scotland the appellation of 'Firths:' its waters are shallow, and have long sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and this is particularly the case during spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the south-west: the borderers, though well mounted, have, in numerous melancholy instances, been overwhelmed and drowned, when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary—even the most experienced persons are liable to be overtaken by the tides, when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety. The principal lines of RAILWAY now in operation, are, the 'Glasgow and South Western,' and 'Caledonian.' The first named includes in its route, Gretna Junction, Gretna Green, Annan, Cummertrees, Ruthwell, Dumfries, Holywood, Closeburn, Thornhill, and Sanquhar. The Caledonian goes to Gretna, Kirkpatrick, Kirtlebridge, Ecclefechan, and Lockerbie.

DIVISIONS and REPRESENTATION.—The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—ESKDALE on the east, ANNANDALE in the middle, and NITHSDALE on the west. It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a sheriff in the thirteenth century, at which period it included the stewartry of Kirkcudbright; the district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewartry from the period when it merged in the Crown by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdictions. Up to the era of the reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocess of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses forty-three parishes, which are divided into five presbyteries and one synod. There are four royal burghs in the county,—Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar, and Lochmaben; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerby, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill and Minniehive. The shire at large sends one member to parliament, and the royal burghs before named join with Kirkcudbright in returning another representative.

							TOTAL POPULATION OF DUMFRIES-SHIRE.....	54606	62960	70878	73770	72855	7746

The total annual value of Real Property, in Dumfries-shire, as assessed in April, 1815, amounted to £295,621.; and the amount assessed to the Property and Income Tax, in 1849, to £309,470.

ANNAN AND BRIDE-KIRK.

ANNAN the capital of the district of Annandale and of its parish, is an ancient royal burgh, 79 miles s. of Edinburgh, 87 s.e. of Glasgow, 43 n.e. of Kircudbright, 27 s. of Moffat, 16 s.e. of Dumfries, and 6 from Ecclefechan; situated on the east or left bank of the river Annan, rather more than a mile above its influx into the Solway Frith; and upon the Glasgow and South Western railway, for which line there is a station here. The name is derived from that of the river, whose appellation is traced to the Celtic An, signifying simply water. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is one of the most ancient burghs in Scotland. Annan was a Roman station, and the Veromum of the geography of Ravenna. It seems to have been held by the Britons after the departure of the Romans, till they were subdued by the Saxons of the Northumbrian kingdom, when it came to the Scotch. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted, with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben, to the ancestors of Robert Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, which was once occupied as a church, but afterwards went to ruins, and the original wall now forms part of the gaol and town hall. Upon the death of David II., in 1371, this castle, Lochmaben, and the lordship of Annandale, came to Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, and went, with his sister Agnes, to the Dunbars, Earls of March; after their forfeiture it went to the Douglasses, who lost it by similar conduct, and then, having come to Alexander, Duke of Albany, he, for rebelling against his brother, King James III, and plundering the fair of Lochmaben, in 1484, also forfeited it. Since that period it continued in the hands of the king, and became the great key of the western border. By the accession of the Bruce family to the throne, it became a royal burgh. The existing charter was granted by James VI. of Scotland, and is dated July 10th, 1612; it confirms previous charters, and particularly recites one conferred by James V, dated 1st of March, 1538, which stated that Annan had with other towns been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, particularly in 1298, when they entered Annandale, and burnt the town with its church. The burgh is governed by a provost, three baillies and fifteen councillors, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and a town clerk. It unites with Dumfries, Sanquhar, Lochmaben, and Kirkcudbright, in returning one member to parliament.

The port or harbour of Annan is free, and vessels of two hundred and fifty tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burthen can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, distant little more than a mile from the town; at this place two new wooden wharfs or jetties have been erected. Vessels generally make the passage between Annan and Liverpool within twelve hours, that is, in one tide only, from harbour to harbour; and a vessel makes at least one trip to and from weekly. The convenience afforded by the rapidity of communication with Liverpool, has greatly increased the trade, and a considerable quantity of bacon, grain, live stock, and other commodities, are conveyed to and from the Liverpool market. Among the other branches of trade are those of shipbuilding and tanning, and there is an extensive distillery a short distance from the town, up the river. Branches of the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' and the 'British Linen Company,' are settled here; there is also a Bank for savings. Limestone and freestone is abundant in many parts of the parish, which has been long famed for the superior quality of potatoes cultivated within it. Annan of late years, has been much improved by new streets and buildings. The old bridge which consisted of five arches, was removed some years since, and another erected on its site, towards which a grant of £3,000 was obtained from government, and the remainder supplied by the county. On the west are the town-house and market-place, and at the east end of the town is a fine church, built of stone, with a tower and spire. A Free church, and United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Independent, and Roman Catholic chapels are the other places of worship. Parochial and Infants' schools, and several private schools are well conducted; but the principal educational establishment is a classical academy: the building, a very handsome one, was erected in 1820; in it are taught most of the elegant, and all the useful branches of education. It is governed by the magistrates and a committee of heritors, and the preceptors consist of a rector, and teachers in the several branches. The market is held on Thursday, at which, during the season, large quantities of pork are sold. There are fairs on the first Thursday in May, the first Thursday in August, and the third Thursday in October. The population of Annan in 1841, was 5,478, and in 1851, 5,848. The portion comprising the Royal burgh, contained 4,570 of that number.

BRIDE-KIRK is a modern village, 3 miles N. from Annan, situated on the west bank of the Annan river. The proprietor was the late Mrs. General Dirom, through whose interest it was erected into a Quoad Sacra parish in May, 1836; and the same lady built the kirk in 1835; she was looked upon as the responsible supporter of the minister. The remains of Bride-Kirk Tower are in this parish. Annan is the post town.

CAERLAVEROCK PARISH,

INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF BANK-END, KELTON, GLENCAPLE QUAY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of Caerlaverock occupies a sort of peninsula, formed by the Solway Frith, the river Nith, and Lochan water. The magnificent ruin of Caerlaverock castle, stands on a level plain, between 8 and 9 miles from Dumfries. It is an ancient possession of the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, and wardens of the western marshes. It was besieged and captured by Edward I., in 1300, and by Cromwell in 1651. After this it ceased to be a tenable fortress, and fell into decay: it now presents a ruin massive and picturesque, eminently worthy the notice of the tourist. This ancient fortalice was the scene of a foul and remarkable murder, about the middle of the fourteenth century, which has furnished the theme of a very beautiful ballad by K. Sharpe, Esq; published in the 'minstrelsy of the Scottish border.' The tragical event was connected with the assassination of the Red Cumine (a powerful chieftain, who formerly held the regency of Scotland), by Robert Bruce, attended by Kirkpatrick and Lindsay, two of his adherents. The parish contained in 1851, 1,418 inhabitants.

BANK-END is a clean, pleasant village, about 7 miles from Dumfries, containing a parochial and grammar school, which is also a boarding academy.

GLENCAPLE QUAY, on the banks of the Nith, in this parish, is where numbers of coasting traders discharge and take in their cargoes, for various parts of the United Kingdom; and when the tide serves, the steamers from Liverpool land their passengers here. KELTON is likewise a small sea port village on the Nith.

CLOSEBURN, GLENCAIRN, DUNREGGAN, MINNIEHIVE,

KEIR, KIRKMICHAEL AND TYNRON.

CLOSEBURN is an inland parish in the district of Nithsdale; it has incorporated with it the parish of Dalgarno, and is about ten miles in length, by about eleven and a half in breadth. The annual produce of the parish amounts to £40,300. of which £3,500 arises from the sale of lime only. The ruins of the ancient Castle of Closeburn, the property of Sir James Stewart Monteath, Bart., forms an interesting object in the scenery here, which derives additional beauty from some romantic waterfalls; within two miles of the castle are some caverns, in one of which latter the hunted covenanters used to take up their abode, to evade pursuit: and it is considered to be the place alluded to by the author of 'Waverley,' in his description of the cave occupied by Balfour of Burley. The most prominent architectural feature in the parish is the baronial mansion, Closeburn Hall a large and splendid Grecian edifice. A school was most amply endowed in 1723, by one John Wallace, a native of the parish; it is placed under the government of the presbytery of Penpont, and in it all the children of the parish are taught the elements of education, free of expense.

The parish of GLENCAIRN is also in Nithsdale, and extends eleven miles in length, by from three to five in breadth. All the western and northern divisions are mountainous and pastoral. Several small rivulets meander beautifully through it, enriching the scenery, to which the elegant mansion and grounds of Robert Butler Esq. contribute greatly. On the south-west verge of the parish is Loch Urr, whence issues the river of that name. A new church has been erected a short distance from the site of the old edifice.

DUNREGGAN is a small well-built village, in the parish of Glencairn, five miles and a half south-east of Penpont, situated on the north bank of the Dalwhat water, where it is crossed by a bridge to MINNIEHIVE, a small but pleasant village, in the same parish as Dunreggan, half a mile therefrom, and sixteen from Dumfries. This is a place of some antiquity, and formerly of more consequence than it now is, having been a burgh of barony, chartered in the reign of Charles I. It was in this district that several martyrs suffered at the time of the Reformation, and in this neighbourhood may be seen various but decent testimonials to their memory.

KEIR is a parish, possessing a considerable quantity of plantation and limestone; it is bounded on the east by Closeburn, on the north west and north by Tynron and Penpont, and on the south by Dunscore; its length is six and a half miles, and its greatest breadth two and a half; one half of the parish is arable, and the other half is divided into pasture, meadow and woodlands.

KIRKMICHAEL, united with Garren, in the district of Nithsdale, is about ten miles long, and four broad. The parish of Kirkpatrick-juxta bounds it on the north-west, Johnstone on the north-east, Lochmaben on the south-east, Tinwald and Kirkmanse on the south, and Closeburn on the west. Many remains of ancient fortifications and Roman roads are visible in this district. A number of ancient coins and other small antiquities have been found beneath the soil. More than half of the parish belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch, and the rest is distributed among several proprietors. The parish kirk is near the Ae river, which bounds the parish on the west.

TYNRON parish lies between Penpont on the north and north-east, and Glencairn on the south, and extends nine miles in length, by a breadth of from two to three. It is watered partially by the Shinnel rivulet, along the banks of which there is some pleasing scenery. Near the eastern extremity of the parish rises the Doon of Tynron, a conspicuous pyramidical hill, near the summit of which is an ancient Castle. A new church has been erected on the site of the old structure.

POST OFFICE, CLOSEBURN, John Coltart, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from THORNHILL) every morning at twenty five minutes past seven, and are despatched thereto every evening at half-past seven

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY ON THE GLASGOW AND SOUTH-WESTERN LINE.

Station, in Closeburn village

CUMMERTREES, POWFOOT, DALTON, MOUSWALD,

RUTHWELL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMMERTREES is a parish and village—the latter clean and neat, is 84 miles s. of Edinburgh, the same distance S. E. of Glasgow, 22 N. W. of Carlisle, 13 S. E. of Dumfries, 10 S. E. of Lochmaben, the same distance S. from Lockerbie, 6 from Ecclefechan, and 4 from Annan, situated on the Caledonian Railway, for which line there is a station at the village. The parish, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, is bounded on the north-east by the river Annan, and on the south by the Solway Frith. It is a flat, fertile, and well cultivated district, and is now well enclosed. The name is derived from the British words Cum-ber-tree, signifying the hamlet at the short valley, and is sufficiently descriptive of the local situation of the village—About a mile south-east of Cummertrees is POWFOOT, a fishing hamlet, situated on the shore of the Solway

DALTON is a small village between three and four miles from Cummertrees. The parish of which now comprehends the two ancient ones of Meikle Dalton and Little Dalton, is four miles in length by three in breadth. Its general appearance is that of high cultivation, which has been extended over once unprofitable moors and commons.

MOUSWALD village stands six miles from Dumfries, lying between that town and Annan. The kirk, which is about a quarter of a mile from the village, on an elevated site, contains a dilapidated effigy of Sir Simon Carruthers, long since laird of Mouswald.

RUTHWELL is a village about three miles from Cummertrees; this place is a barony, and is privileged to hold markets and fairs, but it is long since the inhabitants availed themselves of these rights. It was in ear y days celebrated for the manufacture of salt; but this art has not been practised for some time. Near the shore is the Brow well and hamlet, where Burns spent several of the last weeks of his existence. The kirk and manse of Ruthwell stand about a quarter of a mile from that village. The gardens of the manse, which are extensive and laid out with great taste, contain a very ancient Runic monument, in a good state of preservation' The parochial school is at Clarencefield

About a mile from Ruthwell, in the parish of Mouswald, is Mount Kedar, where a monument has been erected to the memory of the Rev. Henry Duncan, D.D. late minister of Ruthwell. The memorial which is of stone, consists of an arched base and pyramid forty feet in height; on the base an inscription states that he was the founder of the system of savings' banks and was born in 1774, and died in 1846, after being minister of Ruthwell parish forty-four years, when he closed in communion with the free church of Scotland. A Free Church and school-house have been erected here.

DORNOCK, GRAITNEY (OR GRETNA),

WITH SPRINGFIELD, KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DORNOCK is a parish and village—the latter a small one in the district of Annandale, Dumfries-shire, 84 miles s. of Edinburgh, 18 s. of Langholm, 17 s.E. of Dumfries, 12 s.E. of Lockerbie, 7 s. of Ecclefechan, and 2 E. of Annan; situated on the high road from the latter town to Carlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Frith, where there is good sea-bathing. The parish, which is about two miles and a half square, is washed on its southern part by the Solway. An ancient erection, called Stapleton tower, stands on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish; it has been recently purchased by John A. Critchley, Esq., who fitted it up as a summer residence. Robgill tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings, of Robgill, stands in the same parish, and with the broad lands attached, have passed into the hands of FredericM'Connel, Esq., by whom considerable improvements have been made. At a short distance from the village there are the remains of a Roman military road and druidical circle or temple On what was formerly a moor in the parish, a battle is traditionally said to have been fought between the English and the Scotch, in which the former were defeated, and their two commanders slain. Two stones in Dornock churchyard, each 6½ feet long and 2 broad, and raised in the middle like a coffin, mark the place of their reported interment. On these tombs hieroglyphics are cut, which have hitherto puzzled the antiquarian. The kirk and the parochial school, are in the village.

GRAITNEY (more popularly called Gretna) is a parish in the south part of the county, lying on the west side of the small river Sark. The present parish comprehends the old parishes of Gretna and Redkirk, which were united in 1609. The village of Gretna, or Gretna-Green, is situated on the road from Annan to Carlisle, by Longton—eight miles and a half from the former, nine miles and a half from the latter town; and is the first stage on entering Scotland from England. The Glasgow and South Western railway passes through the parish, and there is a station contiguous to the village. This place has long been noted for the celebration of clandestine marriages: any person can perform the ceremony, which merely amounts to a declaration, before witnesses, that the parties are man and wife—such an acknowledgement being sufficient to constitute a valid marriage in Scotland; by a certificate being subscribed by the officiating priest and witnesses, the union becomes quite indissoluble. The fee charged varies according to circumstances, and the means of the party—from half a guinea to £40, and even £50 has been paid. Recently bills were brought into the House of Lords to alter the law of Scottish marriages, and more especially the Gretna Green contracts, but they were not carried further than to require that if the parties belong to any other country, one of them must have resided twenty-one days in the Kingdom of Scotland, before they can be so joined together. The first of these 'convenient priests' was a fisherman named Coulthard; he kept a ferryboat before any high roads were made through the country; after him a farmer, named Peter Graham, succeeded to the office; the next was Joseph Paisley; the present marriage functionary is Mr. John Murray, toll collector. The following is the form of the marriage certificate, which, if required, is furnished:—

"KINGDOM OF SCOTLAND, COUNTY OF DUMFRIES, PARISH OF GRETNA.

"These are to certify to all to whom these presents may come, that A. B., from the parish of ——, in the county of ——, and C. D., from the parish of ——, in the county of ——, being now here present, and having declared themselves single persons, were this day married, after the manner of the laws of the Church of England, and agreeable to the laws of Scotland.

As WITNESS our hands at Gretna Hall," &c., &c.

About a quarter of a mile from Gretna is the village of SPRINGFIELD, which participates in this matrimonial trade; this village as also that of Gretna belongs to the Maxwell family. At SARKFOOT, about a mile from the latter village is good bathing ground. About two miles west from Gretna is the small village of RIGG, where there is a dissenting chapel.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK-FLEMING, interesting in Scottish legend and song, is bounded on the east by Graitney; the kirk and parochial school, which stand at tha southern end of the parish, are about three miles from Gretna. Lime and freestone abound in this district, in which are likewise several mineral springs, possessing medicinal properties similar to those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat. The Caledonian railway, which runs through the village, has a station here.

DUMFRIES, MAXWELLTOWN & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMFRIES, the capital of its county and parish, a royal burgh, the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, is 338 miles from London (by the route of Manchester), 71 s. of Edinburgh, 72 s. E. of Glasgow, 180 s. by w. of Aberdeen, 60 s. E. of Ayr, 33 N. W. of Carlisle (by railway), 15 N. N. W. of Annan, and 8 s. w. of Lochmaben: it is situated on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and there is a station for the line about a quarter of a mile from the town. Dumfries, which may be considered as the metropolis of the south-west quarter of Scotland, is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about nine miles above its confluence with the Solway Frith, and navigable for vessels of light tonnage, the tide flowing as high as the old bridge. There exists no record whereby to ascertain the date when the town was founded, or the etymology of its name Drum-a-frish—Dun-fries—Drumfries and 'Dumfries' have successively been its appellations—Dun a castle, and fries shrubs, is a plausible compound for the original name. The site of this queen of Nithsdale is singularly picturesque, stretching along the banks of the Nith at an elevation sufficient to command a rich prospect terminating at the distance of a few miles in a chain of lofty hills, either cultivated or umbrageous to their summits. There are so many attractions in and around Dumfries, that the gentry of the neighbouring counties resort to it, imparting vivacity and all the delights of good society.

Amongst the improvements of modern times may be named the erection of a suite of assembly-rooms, market-places, the widening of Bank-street, and lighting the town with gas; a spacious quay has been constructed along the side of the town; and a fine Doric column, raised by the county of Dumfries, to the memory of Charles Duke of Queensberry, who died in 1778, adorns the centre of the burgh. The Court-House is a large elegant edifice, comprising a very capacious court-room and other offices; nearly opposite stands the gaol, whence the prisoners are conveyed for trial through a subterraneous passage which communicates with the court-room. Circuit courts of justiciary are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright; there are also ordinary and small debt, sheriffs' and justiciary burgh courts. The station of the Glasgow and South-Western railway is an important erection, giving animation to the south-eastern suburb of the town. The commodious cottages or alms-houses, founded by the benevolence of Mrs. Carruthers, are an interesting memorial to her philanthropy. The Theatre is rather a handsome building of stone, with a projecting portico; the interior, which is tastefully decorated, is lighted with gas: it is generally open a few weeks in the winter. It was here that Kean first emerged, from obscurity to fame, and he never forgot the early patronage of the denizens of Dumfries.

A new and important line of railway from Dumfries, goes through Castle Douglas, Gatehouse, Newton-Stewart, to Stranraer and Portpatrick, thence by steamer to the coast of Ireland, which is but twenty-one miles distant from the last named town. The principal imports are timber, hemp, tallow, coals, slate, iron, and wine; the exports consists of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool, and freestone. Considerable business is done in the manufacture of hosiery, hat-making, brewing, tanning, and the glue manufacture. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for hare-skins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of home fur in England; and it is still looked to as the arbiter of prices. Several branch banking companies afford facilities to the monetary transactions of the town. The principal Hotels are the 'King's Arms,' and the 'Commercial.' Four newspapers are issued weekly, their names are the 'Dumfries Courier,' the 'Dumfries and Galloway Standard,' the 'Dumfries-shire and Galloway Bulletin,' and the 'Dumfries-shire and Galloway Herald.'

The municipal government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three baillies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, a town-clerk, and nineteen councillors. The craftsmen were formerly divided into seven corporations, with each a deacon chosen from their respective trades, who elected one of their own number to be convenor, and another to be general box-master; all of whom formed what was termed a grand committee of the seven trades; these distinctions, however, (for distinctions of considerable importance they were in former times), were virtually abolished by the reform bill; some of the trades possessed considerable property, which has since been publicly sold, and the proceeds equitably divided among the respective parties. Dumfries unites with Annan, Lockmaben, and Sanquhar, in returning one member to parliament. The present member is William Ewart Esq., The numerous nursery grounds around the town are both useful and ornamental to the suburbs. The great desideratum of a copious supply of pure water has been attained, and the inhabitants have an abundance brought from ample sources, about five miles from the town, and as a rate is laid upon all, no housekeeper will hesitate to secure to himself an ample supply

The places of worship, including Maxwelltown, comprise three churches of the Establishment, two of the Free church, several United Presbyterian and Cameronian churches, an Episcopal, a Congregational, a Baptist, and a Catholic chapel. Saint Michael's, or the mother church, claims peculiar notice on account of its cemetery, which contains numberless elegant and curious monuments, many of them very ancient; but the most attractive is the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of the Scottish bard, Burns: the design for the mausoleum was by F. Hunt, Esq., of London., and Turnerelli modelled the sculpture. By the erection of this monument, it may be said that Scotland has repaid the debt so long due to the memory of him of whose natural genius his countrymen may well be proud. Burns died at Dumfries on the 21st July, 1796, aged 37 years, and his remains were deposited in the churchyard of Saint Michael's. The mausoleum and the profusion of funeral sculpture which adorn this cemetery, are so attractive that it is a pity free ingress is not at all times permitted; the fee doubtless prevents many a stranger from inspecting these beautiful memorials to the dead. On January 25th, 1859, the centenary of the birth of the great Scottish poet, a series of banquets, entertainments, &c. were held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and in this, as well as in most other towns both in Scotland and England; poems were written in his honour, and at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, where a grand festival took place, a prize poem (being the best of seven hundred sent for approval), was recited. The tasteful new Free church of Saint Mary, on the north side of English-street, is a graceful ornament to this approach to the town, and the cemetery around it is gradually being enriched with finely executed monumental sculpture.

CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.—The infirmary was founded in 1776, at a period when very few charities, of a similar nature, were in Britain; and this is still the only one in the South of Scotland. Medical advice and medicine are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions, &c., and is under the management of governors. There is also the Crichton Institution for lunatics, a noble foundation upon a lofty site. The Poors' Hospital is for the purpose of supporting aged and indigent poor, and destitute children, who are taught to read and write. It is governed by the magistrates, town council, &c., and is supported by a part of the collections from the church doors, numerous benefactions, donations and annual subscriptions. It was founded in 1753, by Messrs. J. and W. Moorhead, merchants. Dumfries is not behind other towns in its support of numerous religious and educational societies—both an infant and a ragged school are amongst the latter institutions.—The Academy. This elegant and useful seminary was founded in 1802. the expenses of the ground, and of building and finishing the fabric, were entirely defrayed by voluntary subscription. In October, 1814, the structure was formally delivered over to the magistrates as patrons and guardians of the institution, who, along with other members of the town council, have the exclusive privilege of appointing the masters. The New Club House, in Assembly-street, was formerly the Old Assembly-rooms. The Exchange-rooms and a Farmers' Club, are among the novelties. The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Astronomical Society have erected, on Corbelly hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, an observatory, which is regarded as a highly ornamental feature in one of the most unique half-urban half-sylvan landscapes; and commands an extensive view of beautiful and varied scenery; the cost which exceeded one thousand guineas, was raised in £5. shares. The plans were by Mr. Newall, architect, and the building was completed in little more than twelve months. It contains four stories—the lower one for the use of the keeper; three others for the accommodation of the subscribers and strangers, which are furnished with globes, mathematical instruments, newspapers and periodicals; and the upper storey is set apart for a camera-obscura and prism. The grounds, which consist of more than half an acre, are laid out with much taste, containing flowers and shrubs of various kinds.

The market days are Wednesdays. The two principal half-yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and rood fairs. Besides the usual commodities that change hands at these periods, many thousand head of black cattle are bought and sold; and vast quantities of pork also find purchasers in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February. The fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in April, the 26th May or the Wednesday after; the third Wednesday in June, the third Wednesday in July, the third Wednesday in August, the third Wednesday in October and the third Wedneeday in November, for cattle (all old style).

MAXWELLTOWN, formerly a village, is now a burgh of barony, in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and connected with Dumfries by two bridges across the Nith. In no instance have the good effects of erecting a village into a burgh of barony been more conspicuous than in Maxwelltown. The charter was obtained from the crown in 1810, and since that time, from being a poor village, notorious for disorderly conduct—(for it was a remark of the late Sir John Fielding, that he could trace a rogue over the whole kingdom, but always lost him at the bridge-end of Dumfries, now Maxwelltown, or in the Gorbals of Glasgow)—it has improved in value and extent of houses, and increased considerably in the number and respectability of its inhabitants: it is governed by a provost, two bailies and councillors. Among the trading establishments are two foundries and several corn mills. The church here, is handsome and of modern erection.

DUNSCORE, HOLYWOOD AND KIRKMAHOE.

DUNSCORE, a parish in the district of Nithsdale, is bounded by Glencairn and Keir on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcudbrightshire on the south. It is twelve miles in length, and its breadth varies from one to four miles. The hills which surround it are healthy and fit for pasture; and one of them, called Bogrie hill, rises 1,200 feet above the level of the sea. The celebrated John Welsh, son-in-law to John Knox was a native of Dunscore. The land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and black cattle are reared off these lands, for the southern markets; and oats, barley, wheat, potatoes, and turnips are produced in great quantities. The kirk of the parish is about nine miles from Dumfries, and seven from Minniehive. There is also in the parish a Free church, a United Presbyterian church and a Reformed Presbyterian church. Robert Burns, at one time, held a farm in this parish, near the Nith, named Friars' carse, and it was while here that he had an opportunity of eulogizing the Cluden river, which is a continuation of the Cairn water. At this period he took charge of a village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddel Esq.

HOLYWOOD parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for ten miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from two to three miles. The district derives its name from a sacred grove, to which, it is said, the Druids resorted to perform their rites. The temple of these pagans was succeeded by the cell of a hermit, which was subsequently changed into a house for monks of the Premonstratenses, in the beginning of the twelfth century; and the ruins of an old abbey in the churchyard are supposed to be remains of that building. An Irish reuse of the name of Congal seems to have been the founder, and he bequeathed both to the cell and to the abbey the name of Dercongal, signifying "the Oakwood of Congal." The church, an exceedingly neat erection and much admired, stands in a most delightful part of the country, about three miles from Dumfries.

KIRKMAHOE is a small modern village in the parish of its name, and district of Nithsdale, bounded by Closeburn, Kirkmichael, Tinwald, Dumfries, Holywood, Dunscore and Keir; it is five miles from Dumfries, situate on a rivulet, tributary to the Nith, near the southern extremity of the parish. From some of the summits of its uplands, a beautiful view is obtained of the pretty valley of the Nith, fringed in the distance by the Solway tide and in the far-back ground by Criffel and the Cumberland mountains. The church is a handsome Gothic edifice of recent erection. The lands of the parish are well cultivated, and there are several plantations.

POST OFFICE, DUNSCORE, William Broatch, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from DUMFRIES) every afternoon at half past twelve, and are despatched thereto every afternoon at half-past three.

POST OFFICE, KIRKMAHOE, James Smith, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from DUMFRIES) every morning at ten, and are despatched every morning at six.

WITH THE VILLAGE OF WATERBECK IN MIDDLEBIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ECCLEFECHAN is a considerable village, in the parish of Hoddam, 71 miles S. E. of Edinburgh, 75 S. E. of Glasgow, 20 N. W. by rail from Carlisle, 16 E. of Dumfries, and 6 N. of Annan, and 14 from Langholm, lying in a fine situation, near the foot of Annandale, and on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle, within a mile of the station on the Caledonian Railway. The land of Hoddam parish is of the very best quality, under a superior system of cultivation, and the district is perhaps one of the most healthy and pleasant in the south of Scotland. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving cotton goods for the Carlisle manufacturers, who have constantly a demand for the labours of the loom, and which enables the operatives to enjoy many comforts which they would otherwise be deprived of. Ecclefechan contains a few respectable shops, in which a variety of trades are carried on; its prosperity is however mainly sustained by the extensive cattle markets, for which this village has been so long noted. The great marts are held on the first Fridays after the 11th in the months of January, February, March, April and July; the Friday before the 26th of August, the 18th of September (or the Friday before), the 26 of October, the Friday after the 11th of November, and the Friday after the 11th of December. The first Friday after the 11th of May and the 26th of October are hiring days for servants, the latter being also a cattle market; and the first Tuesday after the 11th of June is a fair for cattle and general merchandise. On the two fair days in June and October, the Duke of Buccleuch, as superior, claims certain customs for all standings, and for all cattle exposed for sale. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland has recently been established in the town. Ecclefechan can boast of being the birth-place of two persons of considerable celebrity—namely, the Rev. Edward Irvine, founder of that section of Christians called Irvinites; and Thomas Carlyle, renowned for his quaint but powerful writing.

MIDDLEBIE is a parish lying on the road between Langholm and Ecclefechan: it is about seven miles in length by four in breadth, abounds in red freestone, and is valuable for its lime quarries; but much of the land is of rather poor quality. The village—a small one is about two miles from Ecclefechan, and about twelve from Langholm.

WATERBECK village, in Middlebie parish, is four miles from Ecclefechan, on the road to Langholm. It is a pretty little rural place, and has been much improved by the late Mr. Robert Carlyle and his sons.

LANGHOLM,

AND THE PARISHES OF CANONBIE, ESKDALEMUIR, EWES, WESTERKIRK & NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANGHOLM is a thriving manufacturing town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name; 73 miles S. from Edinburgh, 80 S. W. from Glasgow, 30 E. by N. from Dumfries, the like distance S. E. from Moffat, 21 N. from Carlisle, 18 N. N. E. from Annan, and 12 N. from Longtown (in Cumberland), delightfully situated on both sides of the Esk, over which there is a stone bridge of three arches. This parish and the adjoining ones of Canonbie, Ewes, Westerkirk and Eskdalemuir are known as the 'five kirks of Eskdale.' The town of Langholm owes its origin to a border house or tower, which was formerly the property of the all-powerful Armstrongs, but is now only seen in a state of ruin. Within the memory of man no less than 12 such towers existed, and amongst them Wauchop Castle, the earliest seat of the Lindsay family, was in the immediate neighbourhood. The author of the 'Picture of Scotland' says—'Eskdale derives more than common charm from the memory of Johnnie Armstrong, whose name was associated with many of its localities;' his tower of Gilnockie still stands, though converted into a cow-house, a few miles below Langholm, on the left bank of the Esk. It was on 'Langholm Holm' that, when going to meet king James V. he and his 'gallant companie' of thirty-six men ran their horse and brak' their spears.' Johnnie terminated his mortal career at Carlenrig, a place not far distant from Moss-Paul, on the road between Langholm and Hawick: the story of the judicial execution of this border-thief and his companions, by James V., is well known; the graves of the whole of the marauding band are to be seen in a deserted church-yard at Carlenrig. This district is also associated with the Covenanters especially with the memory of Alexander Peden, one of the most famous of the Scottish worthies; a 'knowe' or small hill commanding a delightful view of the valley, is still named "Peden's View" and at its foot rises "Peden's Well" where in answer to his prayer a mist is said to have "shrouded him from the Dragoons who were seeking his life. Langholm is also the birth-place of Julius Meikle, translator of Camoe Lucied, and author of the song "There's nae luck aboot the house." BURNFOOT on the banks of the Esk, is three miles from Langholm, and was the birthplace of "the four Knights of Eskdale", Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcolm, General Sir John Malcolm, Sir James Malcolm, and Sir Charles Malcolm who in various ways distinguished themselves in various parts of the world. In the neighbourhood of Langholm, there is a copious mineral well, called Blouch Well, which is exceedingly efficacious in the cure of cutaneous diseases. It is less known than it should be, owing to the limited accommodation which as yet exists in its immediate neighbourhood. In the present day Langholm does not seem to partake of any of the peculiarities which distinguished the country in the 'riding times', or in the ages of superstition, being now one of the most thriving towns of its size in Scotland. Within the last few years the trade of the town has increased in a very remarkable manner, the making of plaids and blankets for the neighbouring shepherds has developed itself into the manufacture of tweeds and other fabrics which find their way into all parts of the kingdom and large quantities are exported, they bear a character second to none in the woollen market. Instead of the one small mill which employed a few hands not many years ago, not less than eight manufacturers now give constant employment to a continually increasing population. It only needs that the projected "Carlisle, Langholm and Hawick Railway" be finished in order that Langholm with its inexhaustable water power, should become the most important manufacturing town in the south of Scotland. It is built in the bosom of a lovely woodland scene, along the Edinburgh and Carlisle road; and is composed generally of good stone houses, roofed with blue slate. The bridge connects the ancient town with a more modern suburb on the opposite side of the river, called New Langholm or New town. In the market-place of the old town stands the town-hall, jail, and county police station, ornamented with a neat spire and clock. Besides the woollen mills already alluded to, the town contains a number of respectable shops, a branch each of the 'National Bank of Scotland' and the 'British Linen Company', two distilleries, a brewery, dyehouse, two tanneries, and some excellent inns. The government of the town is vested in a baron baillie, appointed by the Duke of Buccleuch, who is superior, and by a police board, elected by the inhabitants. Sheriff's small debt and justice of peace courts are held at stated periods

The parish church, recently erected, is allowed to be one of the most elegant and substantial in the south of Scotland; the other places of worship are a Free church and two United Presbyterian chapels. A good Parochial school, one endowed by the late Capt. George Maxwell of Broomholm, and one connected with the Free Church are the institutions for instruction, the Parochial and Free church schools, are unusually large and commodious buildings. There is a very extensive and richly endowed library, which derives considerable advantage from a munificient bequest of the late Thomas Telford, Esq, the celebrated engineer, who was a native of the district. The inhabitants have lately brought into the town, at considerable expense, the copious spring known as 'White Well,' whereby every family in the town is now amply supplied with the purest water. A monument to Sir John Malcolm has been erected on the hill behind the old town at a cost of £1,300, and more recently, one has been raised in the market place, in memory of his brother Sir Pulteney Malcolm. The market day is Wednesday; the fairs are held on the 16th April, the last Tuesday in May (old style), 20th July (for lambs) 18th September, and in November: there are also two hiring days—one in May, the other in November.

CANONBIE (or Canonby) is a village and parish delightfully situated on the banks of the Esk, half-way between Longtown and Langholm, and on the southern border of the county; it is separated from England by the river Liddal, whose romantic banks present some pleasing scenery. This parish is about nine miles long and six broad; the high road from Edinburgh to London runs through it. The kirk is a very large stone building, and will accommodate 1,400 persons. There are inexhaustible mines of coal and lime-quarries of excellent quality in the parish, but only a small portion of them are wrought. The scenery along the Esk is considered to be the finest in the south of Scotland. The HOLLOWS is a small village, about a mile and a half from Canonbie: near to which on the north is Gilnockie tower. The Duke of Buccleuch is sole proprietor of the parish.

ESKDALEMUIR is a mountainous pastoral parish, on the north-eastern border of the county, and in the district of Eskdale; the manse, which is about the centre of the parish, is thirteen miles from Langholm. A very small portion of Eskdalemuir is under cultivation; the principal land proprietor is the Duke of Buccleuch.

The parish of EWES, situated on the eastern extremity of the county, is remarkable for its beautiful ranges of green hills, covered with verdure to their summits, and the clearness of the river, which affords excellent trouting. Numerous plantations on the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch, add additional beauty to the lovely appearance of the sweet dale of the Ewes.

WESTERKIRK parish is also situated near the eastern boundary of the county, about six miles from Langholm. Nearly the whole of this portion of the district is devoted to pasture for sheep and black cattle; but there are several elegant villas, which in some degree relieve its otherwise monotonous appearance. The church stands on the left bank of the river Esk.

LOCHMABEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF TINWALD AND TORTHORWALD, AND THE VILLAGES OF COLLIN, ROUCAN, SMALLHOLM, GREEN-HILL, HECK, HIGHTAE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LOCHMABEN is a town of considerable antiquity, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and capital of the parish of the name, 65 miles s. from Edinburgh, 70 s.E. from Glasgow, 33 s. E. from Sanquhar, 30 N. W. from Carlisle, 21 s. E. from Thornhill, the same distance W. from Langholm, 15 s. from Moffat, 13 N. W. from Annan, 10 W. N. W. from Ecclefechan, 8½ N. by E. from Dumfries, and 4 W. from Lockerbie—the last named a railway station on the Caledonian line—situated in a level country, surrounded by a beautiful amphitheatre of hills, and by all the charms which wood and water can bestow. It traces its origin to a very early age, and derives its name from its situation being among a number of beautiful lakes or lochs; the loch on which it is so delightfully placed, the word Lochmaben signifying, in Scoto-Irish, the lake on the white plain. The Castle Loch, which flows very near the south side of the town, is about three miles in circumference; the Mill Loch, is somewhat of less dimensions, and lies on the north side of the town; this loch flows at times even up to the doors of the houses. In these two lochs as well as in the Halleaths Loch, a little east of the town, there is a fish called the vendace (or vendise), which is peculiar to these waters, and is said not to be met with any where else in Britain. These three lochs as well as four others of considerable extent are much resorted to by boating and fishing parties, and these form a very agreeable recreation both to the inhabitants and also to tourists and visitors. The town owes its rise to the protection of a castle of vast strength which was built by Robert Bruce, lord of Annandale, and was the chief residence of the Bruces till the end of the thirteenth century. It stood on the north-west of the lake, which is called the Castle Loch, and was surrounded by a deep moat, the outline of all which is still to be seen. This ancient castle was succeeded by a much larger fortress, built on a peninsula on the south-east side of the same loch. This edifice, with its outworks, covered about 16 acres; after different grants to various relations of the Bruces, it was annexed by parliament, in 1487, to the crown, and is now the property or in the keeping of the Earl of Mansfield. Some of the walls still exist; they are of great thickness, and, with the melancholy firs which mingle with them, present a gloomy yet interesting mass of ruins. The period of the first erection of Lochmaben into a royal burgh is of too remote a date for conjecture; its present charter was granted by James VI, and states that it is a renewal of charters, granted by his illustrious predecessors, its date is 16th of July, 1612, from this charter, it appears that the town was more than once destroyed and burnt during the civil wars, its public edifices plundered, and its ancient records, &c. totally lost; but although the whole of the former privileges have been regained, the place itself has never recovered its former consequence. The municipal government is vested in a provost, one baillie a dean of guild, a treasurer, and five councillors. The election of town councillors is peculiar, the whole council meet on Michaelmas Day, and elect two new councillors for the ensuing year, next, they elect their provost, baillie, dean of guild and treasurer, then they proceed to purge themselves of two old councillors, which is done by a vote being taken as to who shall retire; this system is not fitted for the times and is far from being popular. The burgh unites with Dumfries, Kirkcubright, Annan and Sanquhar, in returning one member to parliament The town-house, with its tower and clock, stands in the middle of the principal street. The town within the last twenty years, has been considerably improved end is now lighted with gas. A subscription library affords amusement and information to the gentlemen by whom it is supported. There are two freemasons lodges, two curling clubs, a bowling green and other associations. There is a branch establishment here of the National Bank of Scotland and also a Saving's Bank for the town and its neighbourhood. Lochmaben is not a place of much trade; with the exception of weaving stockings, shirts, &c., which is carried on to a considerable extent, there are no manufactories. It is a rural town and a place of resort for tourists and strangers, who in the summer months, visit it as a place of retirement and recreation.

The parish church is a handsome and convenient building in the pointed style, with a bold square tower, in which are two well-toned bells; the foundation stone was laid, April 10th., 1818, and was opened for divine worship in July 1820, the cost of its erection was about £3000, and it is capable of accomodating about 1400 persons. There is a chapel for the United Presbyterians, another for the Free Church of Scotland, and one for the Reformed Presbyterians or Cameronians at Hightae, about three miles from Lochmaben. The market is held every alternate Monday, the sale of pork, &c.; and fairs on the first Tuesdays in January, April, July and October, (all old style.)

Within the parish of Lochmaben there are also four villages known as the "Four Towns" viz: SMALLHOLM, GREEN HILL, HECK and HIGHTAE. They are remarkable in Scotland as holding their lands by a peculiar tenure, the proprietors of lands in these baronies are called kindly tenants, and by successive warrants and protections of the king in 1592, 1602, and 1664, declared to have right to continue their possessions undisturbed and at the old rent, so long as they shall continue to pay the same. These baronies are said to have been conferred on the retainers of the Bruce, and many of the present holders can trace their ancestry for hundreds of years back. Son succeeds father and the title is completed by entry of the name in Lord Mansfield's Rental Book, and the usual solemnities of service and infiefment otherwise common to the law of Scotland are here unknown.

The small village of TINWALD, which is situated about six miles from Lochmaben, was the birth-place of Paterson, the projector of the Bank of England, and the planner of the disastrous Darien expedition. The parish is of a triangular figure, each side of which is about four miles and a half in length; its northern boundary is watered by the pleasant river Ae. The greater part of the parish is arable; within its precincts, five miles from Dumfries, is Amisfield Castle, the seat of the ancient family of Charteris.

The parish of TORTHORWOLD lies near the foot of Nithsdale, and is bounded by Tinwald on the north, by Lochmaben and Mouswald on the east, and separated on the west from Dumfries parish by the Lochar water. It extends six miles in length from north to south, by a breadth, at the northern extremity, of about two miles and a half, tapering to a point on the south. The village, which is situated in the north of the parish, is about four miles from Lochmaben, and the same distance from Dumfries. In this village is an excellent classical and commercial academy; and in the vicinity are the ruins of the ancient castle of Torthorwold, supposed to have existed since the thirteenth century. On the road between Dumfries and Annan is COLLIN, and near the parish church is ROUCAN, both villages belonging to this parish.

LOCKERBIE,

AND THE PARISHES OF DRYFESDALE, SAINT MUNGO, TUNDERGARTH AND APPLEGARTH.

LOCKERBIE is a neat small market town in the parish of Dryfesdale, 65 miles s. of Edinburgh, 12 N.E. of Dumfries, 11 N.W. of Annan, 6 N.W. of Ecclefechan, and 4 E. of Lochmaben; situated on the great mail road betwixt Glasgow and Carlisle, 72 miles S.E. of the former, and 26½ N.W. of the latter, and on the Caledonian railway, for which line there is a station here. The town occupies a considerable space of ground; the buildings have a regular and clean appearance, and the surrounding country presents some fine scenery. The origin of this place is remote, and probably, for a long period, its character was only that of a small hamlet, attached to, and protected by the residence or stronghold of a family of some power. It is within the last century that improvements have manifested themselves to some extent, which may be mainly ascribed to the liberality of the proprietors, who have granted long terms to the tenants on their estates. Manufactures have not made their appearance in Lockerbie, but the trade in articles of general and domestic consumption is good, and progressively augmenting with the increasing prosperity of its fairs and public markets. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland, one of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, and another of the Clydesdale Banking Co., are established here; a bank for savings, opened in 1824, has been eminently successful. There are several good inns.

The parish church stands about thirty yards off the High-street, and is centrically placed in relation to the parish generally, the extreme points not being at a greater distance than three miles and a half. The Free church, erected in 1843, is a handsome ornament to Bridge-street, and the chapel, belonging to the United Presbyterian congregation, is a convenient building. There is a female society for the relief of the occasional poor, a masonic lodge, and a circulating library. The town is well lighted with gas.

The market is held on Thursday; from the last week of November till the end of April, it is extensively supplied with pork, at which there are sometimes sold, in a single day, from £1,000 to £2,000 worth; there is also a market for hiring servants on the second Thursday of October (old style.) Fairs are held on the second Thursdays in January, February, March, April, and May, the third Thursday in June, and the second Thursday in August (all old style;) the last fair, which is for lambs, is the largest and last lamb fair in Scotland—the number of lambs on the ground being, in some years, from 30 to 40,000; the remaining fairs are, a new one (established for the sale of cattle) in September, the second Thursday in October for cattle and horses, the second Thursday in November, and the Thursday before Christmas (all old style.) These fairs add much to the prosperity of the town, being well attended; the new one in September takes place the Thursday before the large fair on Brough Hill. The day following the lamb fair in August, races occasionally take place.

DRYFESDALE parish is in the district of Annandale and includes the town of Lockerbie; the extreme length from north-east to south-west is about seven miles; the average breadth of the upper part is about three miles, and of the lower half about one and a half; about two-thirds of the parish is lowland, and the rest is hilly. There is also a considerable extent of holm land towards the junction of the Annan and the Dryfe. Of the whole extent of ten thousand acres in this parish, about eight thousand are either cultivated or have occasionally been in tillage, the remainder being in moor and pasturage. The point which assumes the greatest height is Whitewoollen Hill, the elevation of which is 650 feet above the level of the sea.

SAINT MUNGO parish is in the district of Annandale, through which the road to Glasgow and Carlisle passes, and at a short distance from the villages of Ecclefechan and Lockerbie. Castlemilk is one of the most beautiful mansions in this part of Scotland, being romantically situated in the midst of pleasure grounds, and in the bosom of a fine valley. This was originally the seat of the ancient Lords of Annandale. Much later it belonged to the Maxwells and the Douglasses; it has been recently purchased from George Armstrong, Esq., by a member of the Jardine family. In the minority of Edward VI. it was besieged by the duke of Somerset, and some of the balls fired upon that occasion were found in 1771, when planting a spot afterwards called 'The Cannon Holes.'

TUNDERGARTH is a parish, in which a great number of sheep are pastured, and is separated from that of Saint Mungo's on the west, is nearly 13 miles in length, by a breadth of only about two miles in its widest part. The old castle, now in ruins, is deserving of notice, as it was formerly the residence of the Marquesses of Annandale. The conspicuous hill, called Brunswark, overlooks the district from the south.

APPLEGARTH (or Applegirth) is a parish in the presbytery of Lochmaben: in length northwards it extends nearly five miles and a half, and its breadth eastward the same. It is bounded by Wamphray on the north-east, by Hutton on the east, by Johnstone and Lochmaben on the west, and by Dryfesdale on the south. The village, or hamlet rather, lies on the banks of the Annan, about eleven miles from Dumfries.

POST OFFICE, High street, LOCKERBIE, John Primrose Douglas, Post Master—Letters from LONDON and the NORTH and SOUTH of ENGLAND, arrive every morning at five and are despatched every evening at a quarter before eight. Letters from EDINBURGH and the NORTH, arrive every evening at eight, and are despatched every night at eleven Money Orders granted and paid daily, from nine in the morning till half-past six in the evening.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY
ON THE CALEDONAAN LINE.

Station, at the foot of Bridge street—John Patterson, station master

MOFFAT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF JOHNSTONE, KIRKPATRICK JUXTA, AND WAMPHRAY.

MOFFAT, is a parish, in the interesting district of Annandale—the town (which has been styled the 'Baden of Scotland') is small, airy, cleanly and very respectable, 51 miles s. of Edinburgh, and 21 N. of Dumfries; situated two miles from the Beatock station, on the Caledonian railway, to and from which an omnibus runs frequently each day. By this railway access is easy to the metropolis and the neighbouring towns, as well as to Carlisle and England generally. A coach runs between Dumfries and Moffat, daily. The town stands 378 feet above the level of the sea, and upon rising ground gently declining towards the south, immediately at the foot of, and embraced by a chain of mountains, which form the northern boundaries of Dumfries shire, with the adjacent counties of Lanark, Peebles and Selkirk, and which completely environ it on the west, north and east; the huge summits of this elevated region reach to various altitudes; some covered with wood—others beautifully checquered and skirted with plantations of unequal size, and natural clumps of birch, oak, and mountain ash, affording shelter and enclosure to the intervening grounds, which are partly cultivated and partly in pasture. The progress in these pursuits has been of late very remarkable, as shewn in the rise in the price of land, and the reputation of the farm stock of the breeders in the neighbourhood. The principal street of the town (High-street) is wide and spacious, laid down upon the principle recommended by the late Mr. M'Adam, and is clean and dry, even within a few minutes after the heaviest fall of rain. It is beautifully lined with ranges of excellent shops, well supplied with the necessaries and luxuries of life, even the branch streets, are being pressed into the service of commerce. On the way to the wells, and all round the skirts of the town proper, there are rows of splendid villas, cottages, &c., externally well built, and internally fitted with all the modern appliances of comfort. Several mansions stud the vicinity—Craigieburn, Dumcrieff, Granton, Heatheryhaugh, Langshaw, Larchhill, Mount Charles, &c. The town commands an extensive and fine prospect of a delightful valley, stretching towards the south, interspersed with hedge-rows, meadows and corn-fields, and pleasingly diversified by the windings of the river Annan, which has its source in an extraordinary strange and wild ravine, in this district, named the 'Devil's Beef Tub,' and runs at the distance of about two hundred yards, along the south-west of the town, then glides away to meet its neighbouring streams, the Evan and the Moffat, which unite about five miles below; the surrounding plantations, every year increase in extent and beauty, and the cultured strath, the tree-garnished hill, the legended turret, ancient Roman camps and roads, beautiful walks, and the copse and thicket free to the foot of the visitor, supply the eye with pleasure and the frame with health. About four miles north-west from hence there is a petrifying spring, and there are others that do not attract so much notice. To the antiquary the neighbourhood of Moffat presents many objects of gratification, and to these are attached traditions worthy of attention, but too numerous and prolix for detail in a work like the present. The celebrated road maker, John Loudon M'Adam, died in this town on the 26th November, 1836, in his eighty-first year: he was a native of Ayrshire, but was much attached to the locality of Moffat, where he spent a great portion of his early life; upon one of his sons was conferred the honour of knighthood, which his father had declined on account of his age, and growing infirmities; Mr. M'Adam received from government £10,000, in two separate instalments; to his credit it is recorded that, during the whole career of his honourable independent service, he never contracted for works, deeming such a method of acquiring wealth incompatible with the duties of an engineer. There are three principal inns, admirably conducted by their respective proprietors—their names are the 'Annandale Arms,' the 'Star,' and the 'Black Bull,' while a fourth the 'Beatock Bridge Hotel,' lies south of the town and near the railway. The other chief public buildings are Moffat House (the town residence of the superior, J. J. Hope Johnstone, Esq. of Annandale), the Established, the Free, and the United Presbyterian churches, the bath room, the bank, the academy and Morison's school.

Moffat has long and justly been celebrated as a fashionable summer resort, for invalids and pleasure seekers; and for the medicinal virtues of of its mineral waters. The springs are three in number. one sulphureous and two chalybeate; the sulphureous spring is distinguished by the name of 'Moffat well,' and is about a mile from the town; a very good carriage-road leads to it, and during the summer an omnibus plies between it and the town. There are likewise in the town well frequented bath-rooms, to which a spacious news-room is attached for the use of visitors; these are under excellent management. The large hall of the bath-room is used for concerts, lectures, &c. and during the summer, a subscription band is added to the other attractions, which dispenses 'the concord of sweet sound.' to the promenaders; on every Friday during the season, there is a weekly ball. On the same premises, there is a small but neat and well kept bowling-green as well as a billiard-room. It is now upwards of two hundred and fifty years since the discovery of the valuable qualities of this spring, during which time it has been much frequented from all parts of Scotland, the northern counties of England, and in some instances from Ireland; of late, the summer visitors have so increased, as to be numbered by thousands. In all scrofulous and scorbutic cases it is a powerful remedy, being seldom known to prove ineffectual when the lungs were not diseased; in the removal of billious complaints, also, it is eminently successful, as well as in creating appetite and promoting digestion; and it is an excellent specific for gravel and rheumatism: it sparkles in the glass like champagne, but is so volatile that it can be drunk in perfection only at the fountain. Hartfell spa was first discovered in the year 1748, by a man named John Williamson: it issues from a rock of alum slate, in the side of Hartfell mountain, near Moffat; it may be carried to any distance and will keep for years; it is a potent restorative, highly beneficial in all complaints peculiar to the fair sex, and may be advantageously used as a wash in the healing of obstinate cutaneous eruptions. The other chalybeate is of a peculiar nature, and obtained in a very curious manner, viz. by pouring water upon a rock in the side of a savage dell, called 'Gartpool Linn,' in the vicinity of the town: the surface of this rock is strongly impregnated with sulphate of allumina and iron; the water is much stronger than that of Hartfell, and consequently is taken in smaller portions—not more than a wine-glass full at a time. Moffat has been the birth-place of several notables, eg. Robert Johnstone, L.L.D., author of a 'History of Scotland,' &c.; Walter Boyd, banker, of Boyd, Benfield & Co.; William Dickson, a writer on Slavery; William Murray, the chronometrist; and Dr. D. Welsh, moderator of the first Free Church assembly.

The parish of KIRKPATRICK JUXTA derives its name from its vicinity to a chapel formerly dedicated to the famous missionary, meaning the 'lands nigh to the kirk of Saint Patrick;' it is situate in the upper district of Annandale—bounded on the north by Moffat, and on the east by Wamphray. The celebrated Gartfell Linn is in this parish; likewise the castle of Auchincass, the ruins of which cover a considerable extent of ground: it was erected by Randolph, Earl of Murray, during the minority of David 'the Bruce,' and subsequently was in the possession of Douglas of Morton: its antiquity, therefore, is unquestionable; the old tower of Loch-house is supposed to have been rebuilt by James Johnstone, of Corehead, chamberlain to Bishop Whiteford, of Brechin, whose daughter the chamberlain married, and with her obtained possession of the extensive lands belonging to the bishop in Kirkpatrick Juxta and Moffat. Loch-house is now inhabited by a cottier or herd, who has his cot within its walls. There are other ruins of ancient edifices, which excite some interest and are worthy of survey. The summer residence of William Colvin, Esq., Craiglands, is the only modern mansion of any note in the parish, with the exception of the Beatock Inn, about a mile and three quarters from Moffat. About one-third of the land is under tillage; the larger portion is unimproved and pasture. The different rivers supply abundance of amusement to the trout-angler; and the celebrated alpine lake, Lochskeen (whose elevation is upwards of one thousand feet above the level of the sea), contains the finest species of that fish in the south of Scotland. The outlet of the waters of this lake is by the lofty and magnificent cascade called the 'Grey Mare's Tail,' tumbling over precipitous rocks, computed to be about four hundred feet above the level of the vale, and which appears, from the opposite side of the glen to be one unbroken fall. This is the loftiest fall in the British Islands; it pours its waters into the infant Moffat, which flows on through a grand narrow pass, until it sweeps through the domains of Dumcrieff (the property of Lord Rollo), and loses itself in the Annan. The market is held on Friday, and the fairs on the third Friday in March, the second Friday in September, at which time a flower, poultry, dairy, pony, sheep, &c. show, or rather a combination of shows is held, to which, by its excellence, great crowds are attracted, and on the 20th of October, or the Friday after.

JOHNSTONE parish is in the district of Annandale, adjoining Kirkpatrick Juxta; it is six miles in length and three in breadth. The remains of Lochwood tower, situate at the northern end of the parish, in the centre of a venerable and picturesque wood, and surrounded by impassable bogs, are the only vestiges of antiquity, sufficiently interesting to attract attention, in the parish: regarding the (now unknown) personage by whose orders it was originally erected, James VI is recorded to have remarked, that, 'however honest he might have been in outward appearance, hd must have been a rogue at heart;' Robert, natural brother to the chieftan, Lord John Maxwell, of Nithsdale, burnt it down in savage glee in the sixteenth century, during the clannish quarrel, which resulted in the battle of Dryffe Lands. John James Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Annandale, M.P. for Dumfries-shire, is proprietor, and occupies an elegant mansion, called Raehills, the only notable residence in the parish. There is nothing peculiar to be observed respecting this local portion of the district, further than that (on the authority of a late reverend minister) 'in this populous rural parish there is neither public-house nor meeting-house, nor resident surgeon, nor village, nor prison, nor lawyer, nor beggar,' all of which is true still, except unfortunately, the last mentioned. It has two excellently conducted schools, and all the educational, moral, and religious interests of the parish are carefully and efficiently attended to. The parish churchyard contains the family vault of the House of Annandale.

The parish of WAMPHRAY receives its name from its situation, emphatically expressed by the Gaelic word Uamh-fri, signifying 'the den in the forest.' Agreeably to this etymology, the church stands in a deep woody recess, by the side of Wamphray water, which brawls and thunders its way through a most romantic and picturesque glen, formed on both sides either by high steep banks, clad with thriving plantations—or by lofty basaltic columns, mantled with ivy, and sportively adorned by saplings of ash rising from their interstices. This parish adjoins Kirkpatrick and Johnstone; it is of an oblong figure, six miles and a half in length by three in breadth. There are but four resident proprietors.

SANQUHAR,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CRAWICK, KIRKCONNEL, WANLOCKHEAD AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SANQUHAR is a parish in the district of Nithsdale—the town an ancient one, and burgh of barony, is 56 miles S.S.W. of Edinburgh, the same distance S. by E. of Glasgow, 32 E. S. E. of Ayr, and somewhat about 26 N. W. of Dumfries; situated on the road, up the left bank of the Nith, passing into Ayrshire, and on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, for which line there is a station on the east side of the town. Sanquhar, it is supposed, owes its origin to a castle of considerable importance, the ruins of which are now to be seen at a short distance to the south-east, on a high bank overlooking the river Nith. It must have been a building of great strength, having towers at the angles, and was surrounded by a ditch. It formerly belonged to a branch of the family of Creighton (or Crichton), ancestors to the Earl of Dumfries. The castle, as well as greater part of the land in the neighbourhood, is now the property of the Duke of Buccleuch. About a mile from it stands the house of Eliock, the residence of the family of Veitch, which gave a senator to the college of justice in the last century; this mansion lays claim (which is disputed by some authorities) to the honour of being the birthplace of the 'admirable Crichton.' The town consists chiefly of one main street. The family of Queensberry has been great patrons of this town, particularly in improvements on the roads which pass through or approach to it. The late duke also erected the town hall, at his sole expense; it stands at the end of High-street, and has a tower, with a clock. Sanquhar is the principal coal mart in the county, and large quantities are supplied to Dumfries and other parts In this parish, as well as that of Kirkconnel, the seams are most valuable; the coal-field, extends seven miles in length and two and a half in breadth, and the veins are from three feet eight inches to four feet six inches in depth. The Duke of Buccleuch is the chief proprietor. At the eastern extremity of the parish, about nine miles from the town, are the valuable lead mines of WANLOCKHEAD, belonging likewise to that nobleman. They are said to have been discovered in the minority of James VI., by some Germans, who were employed in searching for gold about this spot: at present, employment, by these works, is furnished to a considerable number of miners, artisans and others. There are about one hundred and fifty cotton weavers employed by the Glasgow manufacturers, and upwards of two hundred females of the neighbourhood, are occupied in embroidering muslins for the same market. Near the town is a large manufactory for spades, shovels and other agricultural implements. In the town are branches of the British Linen Company's bank and the Royal Bank of Scotland; there is also a Savings' Bank and a Mechanics' Institute.

Sanquhar was erected into a burgh of barony in 1484, and advanced to the dignity of a royal burgh, by charter from James VI., in 1596. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and nine councillors, and, in connexion with Dumfries, Annan, and Lochmaben, sends one member to parliament. A sheriff's small-debt court is held here, four times a year.

The places of worship, in the town, are the parish church, a Free church, and two for United Presbyterians. The parish church, which was erected in 1823, on the site of the old one, is a very handsome edifice, with a square tower, and stands on elevated ground, at the west end of the town. At WANLOCKHEAD is a chapel, in connection with the establishment, for the accommodation of the miners and others employed in the lead works. The executors of the late James Crichton, of Friars' carse, in this county, and a native of Sanquhar, appropriated £2,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a free school in Sanquhar. The weekly market, formerly held on Friday, is no longer continued, but there are five cattle markets held in the year—namely, on the first Friday in February; in the third Friday in April; on the Friday before Tarbolton fair, in June; on the Friday before Falkirk tryst, in October; and on the Friday before Mauchline fair, in November. Fairs on the first Friday after the 12th day in the months of February, May, August and November (old style); and a large fair for lambs, sheep, and wool, on the 17th July, or the first Friday after.

KIRKCONNEL village is four miles from Sanquhar, and eight from New Cumnock; situate on the high road between Dumfries and Glasgow. It contains the parish church and parochial school. The parish which is bounded by that of Sanquhar on the south and east, is fifteen miles in length and eight in breadth. In it are two mineral springs, one possessing medicinal properties similar in effect to those of Hartfell spa, near Moffat; the other similar to the Kirkland spa, in Galloway. The village inhabitants are almost all employed in the lead mines. The Duke of Buccleuch is proprietor of nearly the whole of this parish.

POST OFFICE, SANQUHAR, James Kerr, Post Master—Letters arrive from LONDON and all parts (except Glasgow and Ayrshire), every morning at a quarter to nine and are despatched for LONDON and all parts (except Glasgow and Ayrshire), every night at nine. Station, on the east side of the Town—Edmund Martin, station master

THORNHILL,

AND THE PARISHES OF MORTON, DURRISDEER, AND PENPONT, THE VILLAGE OF CARRON BRIDGE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THORNHILL is a very respectable and considerable village, in the parish of Morton, 66 miles S. by E. of Glasgow, 48 N. W. of Carlisle, 40 N. E. of Newton Stewart, 34 S. E. of Kilmarnock, 30 N. W. of Annan, the same distance S. E. of Cumnock, 22 N. E. of New Galloway, 14 N. W. of Dumfries, 12 S. E. of Sanquhar, and 7½ N. E. of Minnichive. It is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and is charmingly situated towards the centre of the extensive amphitheatre of hills which include Middle Nithsdale, with the river Nith winding through the valley. About four miles from Thornhill is Drumlanrig Castle, the noble mansion of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, it is beautifully situated on rising ground on the right bank of the river, overlooking the whole district. Within the last twenty or thirty years the woods around the castle have been greatly extended, and now cover a large portion of country. The gardens and pleasure grounds of the castle are very beautiful; they are kept with great care, and are free to the inspection of visitors. The castle was built by William, first Duke of Queensbury, between the years 1674 and 1684; and it is said that the expense incurred in building, was so great, that the Duke, not wishing that any one should inspect the accounts connected with it, wrote upon them: "The deil pyke out his een that looks herein." It is also related that the Duke only slept one night in the castle that had cost him so much in erecting. Some of the remains of a very ancient building, which was called the House of the Hansock and on the site of which, the present castle was built, may still be traced. In the year 1776 when Mr. Pennant visited Drumlanrig there was a breed of wild cattle in the woods, which are described as having been of a milk-white colour, with black ears and fine large curved horns. It is said they were removed to Chillingham Castle in Northumberland, where the breed still exists as well as at Hamilton. About a mile from Drumlanrig is the site of the castle of Tibbers: the castle itself having been long demolished. It is stated that it was taken by stratagem and burned by Sir William Wallace. About three miles from Thornhill are the very fine ruins of Morton Castle. It is very ancient, having been under the care of Sir Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray during the minority of David Bruce. The ruins and the surrounding scenery are very picturesque, and haae formed a study for several distinguished painters, "Thomson of Duddingston, Horatio M'Culloch, and J. E. Coulie." The remains of Roman encampments, and, in the high grounds, of ancient British encampments are very numerous over the whole of the district; and, at one time, there were many cairns of stones.

About three miles from Thornhill, in the parish of Closeburn, there is a very remarkable ravine, worn out of soft sandstone by a little rivulet. This is Crickhope Linn, classical from the writings of Sir Walter Scott, in which it is described as being the hiding-place of Burley of Balfour. This place as well as almost every glen in this district, has associations connected with the times of the persecuted covenanters. The whole of the district may also be said to form part of "the land of Burns." Over it he travelled while engaged in the duties of the Excise; and many of his finest poems are connected with it.

The village of Thornhill is in a very salubrious situation; he streets are wide, and the houses are neatly disposed. The tenure upon which the houses are held, is doubtful. The land belongs to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry. In Thornhill is an Institute having for its object the diffusion of knowledge among the people by means of public lectures, classes &c., it has also successfully engaged in a few publications. In connexion with it there is a small Museum. The president is Dr. Grierson, the treasurer, Mr. William Brown; and the secretary, Mr. John Sloan. There is also a public library, containing nearly 1500 volumes; a reading room; several benevolent societies; a musical club; a bowling-green; an instrumental band, &c., &c. The trade of the village is chiefly of a domestic nature; there is, however, a brewery, and it can boast of two of the most respectable and comfortable hotels that can be met with in the south of Scotland—they are the 'Buccleuch and Queensberry Arms,' and the 'George.'

The parish church, which was erected in 1781, was so inconveniently situated, as regarded the accommodation of the majority of the inhabitants, that it was taken down, and a new one in 1840-1 erected, in a handsome style, contiguous to the village. Fairs are held on the second Tuesdays in the months of February, May, August, and November (old style); and on the last Friday in June; the latter chiefly for hiring reapers and agricultural labourers.

CARRON-BRIDGE is a village in the parishes of Morton and Durisdeer, it stands on the rivulet Carron, on the road from Sanquhar to Dumfries, 1¾ miles north west of Thornhill; it has a station on the Glasgow and South Western Railway.

The parish of MORTON extends from the left bank of the Nith north-eastward to the borders of Lanarkshire, a distance of between six and seven miles by a breadth of about four; it is bounded on the north and north-west by Penpont and Durisdeer, and on the east and south by Closeburn: it is both pastoral and arable, and, where cultivated, is well enclosed and fertile. In addition to the Nith, the Carron and Cample streams pass through the parish, nearly the whole of which is the property of the Duke of Buccleuch PENPONT parish, which gives name to a presbytery, is an extensive agricultural district, of irregular form and uneven surface, having comparatively little flat or low grounds: the latter description of land is found chiefly upon the verge of the rivers which flow through it. The village is about two miles from Thornhill; the church, which is contiguous to the village, was built in 1782; it underwent a thorough repair in 1834, when a session-house was annexed to it. The village has been recently lighted with gas and the houses are supplied with water by means of pipes. There are two other places of worship in the parish, one for the Relief Congregation (erected in 1800); the other belonging to the Reformed Presbytery. The stupendous Glenquhargen Craig rising perpendicularly one thousand feet, and one of the greatest natural wonders in Scotland, is in this parish; there are likewise the remains of Roman encampments, causeways, and a castle.

The parish of DURISDEER is bounded on the south, and south-east by Morton, on the north and north-east by the parish of Crawford, on the south and south-west by Penpont, and on the north-west by Sanquhar; it is eight miles in length, and six in breadth. In this parish is Drumlanrig Castle, the superb and noble residence of the Duke of Buccleuch; it was erected towards the close of the seventeenth century. About a mile above the church the traces of a Roman encampment are obvious. Ajoining the parish church is the sepulchural vault of the Drumlanrig Douglases, over it is a magnificent marble monument and two sculptural figures in the Roubilliac taste, representing James second Duke of Queensbury and his Duchess; this monument was brought from Rome. Exclusive of three small properties, the entire parish belongs to the nobleman before-mentioned.

ELGINSHIRE,

So designated from the name of its capital, Elgin, and sometimes Morayshire, from being the central division of the 'Province of Moray'—is one of the northern counties of Scotland: bounded on the north by that branch of the north sea called the Moray Frith, on the east and south east by Banffshire, on the south-west by Inverness-shire, and on the west by the latter county and also that of Nairn. The figure of Elginshire is very irregular, being intersected in several places by districts of the counties which form its boundaries; with Nairn it is so intimately connected, that, in speaking of its shape, that small county is not unfrequently included in the description: thus conjoined, the district is somewhat of triangular figure—with the apex pointed inland—and in this quarter partaking of the wild, rocky and mountainous character of the Highlands. The county may be said to comprehend 470 square miles of land, and seven square miles of lakes. For the last few years agricultural improvements have made rapid strides here, and the greater portion of waste land is now either brought into cultivation or planted with forest trees. In ancient times the limits of the county were much more extensive than at present, comprehending all that tract of country which lies between the river Spey on the east, the Beauly on the north-west, and the northern confines of Argyleshire on the south west. The remains of antiquity are numerous, of which the cathedral of Elgin, the Bishop's palace at Spynie, the priory of Pluscardine, the castles of Lochindorb and Dunphail, and the 'dun' of Relugas, are the chief. Of the struggles of the natives with the Danes, who infested the district in former ages, there are various testimonials, such as 'cairns,' monumental pillars, &c. &c. The 'Province of Moray,' anciently so important and extensive, in the present day is without any political distinction, and is divided into the three several shires of Banff, Moray (or Elgin), and Nairn. On the east it is separated from Aberdeenshire by the Deveron; on the west it is bounded by Inverness-shire, and on the north it has the large arm of the sea, designated from it the Moray Frith. So late as the time of Charles I, the Highlanders considered Moray as a sort of neutral land, where every man was at liberty to take his prey. The Province of Moray suffered more, perhaps, than any other district in Scotland by the civil wars. The people were then generally attached to the covenant; and, as Montrose made it one of his principal scenes of action, it is easy to conceive that its peaceable farmers were not permitted to have both their opinions and their goods undisturbed. Montrose, in his descent upon Moray, in 1645, after his victory of Innerlochy, destroyed all the houses of such as did not join his standard, and gave up the towns of Banff, Cullen, and Elgin to indiscriminate pillage.

Soil, surface, climate, produce, &c.—The soil of this county, though less uniform than that of Banffshire, is for the most part a sandy loam—in some places a sandy gravel; considerable tracts are of very fertile clay, and of the most genial mould. The low country may be pictured as a large plain, extending from the Spey westward, between the shore and a range of mountains, for the whole length of the district, nearly forty miles—but of unequal breadth, from about five to twelve miles or more, measured on a straight line from the hills to the shore: this plain, however, is diversified, over its whole extent, by ridges of lower hills in general nearly parallel to the shore: beyond this are valleys of great fertility and beauty, near the sources of the rivers Spey, Lossie, and Findhorn—with the lesser vales along the banks of the tributary streams which pervade the intervening hills. Within the range of the mountain district, the county may be described as chiefly pastoral; the arable land, in most instances, hanging upon the acclivities of the valleys, or stretching out in narrow plains upon the banks of the waters which wind among the hills—the wideness of the valley bearing a relative proportion to the size of the river. The upper part of the county is popularly termed 'the Brae of Moray:' it is mountainous and woody, and abounds in beautiful lakes. The agriculture is very spirited, and the land in general yields a higher rent than that of the neighbouring shires. In the lower part of the county, the Earl of Fife, and other proprietors, have formed plantations to so great an extent, that almost every part of the country inaccessible to the plough has been covered with different species of forest trees. A considerable traffic in the export of wood from the forests of Strathspey, by floating it to Garmouth, has been carried on to advantage. Except sandstone, limestone, and marl, no mineral substance of value has been discovered in this district. The greatest attention is paid to the breed and to the feeding of cattle, and the culture of wheat is not so general anywhere northward of the Grampians. Little can be said respecting manufactures: woollen stuffs are made to a small amount, as well as linen yarn; which, together with grain, cattle, salmon, hewn freestone, wood, and whisky, comprehend the principal exports. The coast of this district, although within the fifty-eighth degree of north latitude, has ever been distinguished for the mildness of its climate: the hardier kind of fruit—all the varieties of the apple, and almost all of the pear and of the plum—by a little attention may be abundantly produced on every farm; fruits, also of greater delicacy—the apricot, the nectarine, and the peach—ripen sufficiently on a wall in the open air. With respect to the winds, the most prevailing gales are from the north-west. This part of the country presents no object so elevated as to attract the clouds or to impede their course; and from this cause, it is concluded, falls of snow are comparatively unfrequent, and of small depth, as they are drifted over the subjacent levels, insomuch that the operations of husbandry are but little interrupted by the inclemency of the weather. It is asserted that, in the lower part of Moray, the climate is as warm, and the atmosphere at least as dry, as in any district of Scotland; in the higher quarter, the weather is more mild than in the adjoining county of Banff, at the same distance from the sea coast—a natural consequence of its local position, the progress of cultivation, and the inherent warmth of the soil.

Rivers, Lakes, and Railways.—The principal rivers are the Spey, the Findhorn, and the Lossie, all flowing in a northerly direction, and each teeming with the finest salmon. There are many delightful lakes, of which Loch Spynie is most deserving of notice: it is three miles in length and one in breadth, and appears to have been formerly a firth of the sea, though it is now shut up at the east and west by a long extent of valuable ground; in accordance with this apparency, the land between the lake and the sea still retains the appellation of Ross Isle; and a corroborative proof of the accuracy of the popular designation is exhibited by the sea-shells (particulary those of the oyster) that are found on the margin of the lake, several feet below the surface of the earth. Loch Spynie nourishes several of the aquatic tribes, but none in such abundance as the perch and the pike. The Railways in this county are the Aberdeen, and Inverness Junction Line which passes through, calling at Elgin and other towns—there is also a Branch from Elgin to Lossiemouth, and another to Rothes.

Elginshire comprehends sixteen parishes, and eight parts of parishes; it contains two royal burghs —ELGIN and FORRES: the former is united with Cullen, Banff, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to parliament; and the COUNTY at large, in conjunction with Nairnshire, deputes another representative.

DUTHIL, ROTHIEMURCHUS, CARR-BRIDGE,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUTHIL, with which is incorporated ROTHIEMURCHUS, is a parish lying partly in this county and partly in that of Inverness; the river Spey is the divisional line here between the two districts, and the river Dulman intersects that part of the parish situated in Moray, for nearly thirteen miles, when it falls into the Spey. ROTHIEMURCHUS (now defined as a township), lies between the Cairngorm mountain and the Spey, a short way further up that river than the greater part of Duthil; jointly they extend in length twenty miles, by a breadth of seventeen. The whole is generally highland in its character; game is plentiful, and there is a considerable quantity of natural wood. The name of Grant is remarkably prevalent in this district. The parish church stands about six miles from Grantown, and 24 from Inverhaven; and there is a Free church erected, and a manse in course of erection. CARRBRIDGE, or, as it is commonly called, the "Bridge of Carr," is a small village in this parish, 19 miles from Kingussie, and 25 from Inverness.

ELGIN,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF LOSSIEMOUTH, BURGHEAD, BISHOP MILL, LHANBRYDE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ELGIN is a royal burgh, the capital of its shire, and the seat of a presbytery in the synod of Moray; 189 miles N. of Edinburgh by way of Aberdeen, and 153 by way of Brechin and Huntly, 83 N. of Brechin, 64 W. of Aberdeen, 39 N.E of Inverness, 12 E. by N. of Forres, and 9 W. of Fochabers; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the river Lossie, about five miles above its influx into the Moray Firth at Lossiemouth, and surrounded by hills o'er clad with waving pine, beech, oak, and elm trees. It is the general supposition that the town was originally a settlement of Helgy, a general of the army of Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who, about the year 927, conquered Caithness, Sutherland, Ross, and Moray, and it is said from this person the name of Elgin is derived; and as the word Helgyn is still used in the inscription upon the seat of the town, it is probable that this etymology is correct. So early as the reign of William the Lion a castle was built here, the ruins of which are still visible on an eminence, called 'Lady hill,' on the north-west side of the town. In 1224 Andrew, bishop of Moray, translated the bishopric from Spynie to the church of the Holy Trinity, near Elgin, but the cathedral was burnt down by Alexander Stewart, Lord of Badenoch (commonly called the Red Wolf of Badenoch), son of Robert II. in 1390, who was forced from his fastness in Lockerbie, to do penance for the deed. About the year 1414 it was rebuilt in a magnificent manner. From what still remains, it appears to have been a large and superb edifice, in the Gothic style of architecture, two hundred and sixty-four feet in length, and thirty-five in breadth. The chapter-house, which still remains pretty entire, and was some years since repaired, and covered with a roof of lead, by the Exchequer, is a beautiful specimen of tasteful architecture; and the whole, when perfect is supposed to have been one of the most magnificent religious structures in Europe. The ruins form a conspicuous object on the approach to Elgin from the east; while, as a beautiful contrast, immediately opposite, towards the south, stands Anderson's Institution, for the support of old age and the education of youth, a fine modern structure, erected a few years since by the munificent bequest of General Alexander Anderson, H.E.I.C.S a native of the place, and of very poor parentage. The funds for the support of this institution are between £70,000 and £80,000. The structure is in the Grecian style, and occupies about an acre of ground: it is surmounted by a handsome dome, and on the pediment in front, which is supported by four massive stone pillars, is placed a statue of the benefactor, represented in the attitude of delivering a bible to a youthful figure, whilst, with his right hand, he is supporting the figure of an aged man: the building cost about £8,000. The apartments for the aged are in the west wing; those for the scholars of the institution, of whom there are about forty, who are orphans, and are wholly supported and educated in the establishment, are in the east wing. At the back, or south wing, is the Free school, where the children receive a free education, but are supported at home: the number of these averages from two hundred to two hundred and thirty. After passing through the nursery grounds of George Morrison and Son, this building has a pleasing effect on entering the town, from Aberdeen. The western extremity of the town is embellished by Gray's Hospital, a noble and modern structure. Dr. Alexander Gray, of India, a native of Elgin, by will bequeathed £30,000 for the purpose of erecting and endowing a hospital for the sick poor of this town and county. This building is delightfully seated upon an eminence, and has a fine portico, supported by stately pillars, and surmounted by an elegant dome: the whole is spacious, and built of fine stone, according to a design furnished by Mr. Gillispie, of Edinburgh.

The principal street of the town is about a mile in length, widening in the centre, where stands the Established church, a beautiful modern structure, after a plan by Archibald Simpson, Esq., it is calculated to seat a congregation of two thousand. The western pediment is supported by six massive fluted columns; and at the east end is a lofty tower, surmounted by a figure of Demosthenes' lantern, supported by eight columns: the building cost about £8,000. On the west of it is a raised and spacious pavement, used as a market place for farmers' produce, and also a beautiful fountain, which has an imposing effect. In North-street, commencing about the middle of the town, are many fine buildings, particularly the Trinity Lodge Rooms, a handsome edifice erected in 1821, after a design by Mr. Burns, of Edinburgh, and at a cost of £3,000. This street is tastefully terminated by the Trinity or Scottish Episcopal chapel, a neat Gothic edifice, erected in 1825. During the last few years Elgin has very considerably increased in extent, and many of the old buildings, which obtruded themselves upon the front of High street, have been pulled down, and new structures raised in their places. In this street are the principal inns. Here, also, are the banking houses—highly respectable branches of the British Linen Company; the Commercial Bank of Scotland; the North of Scotland Bank; the Caledonian Bank; the Union Bank of Scotland; the Royal; the City of Glasgow, and a Savings' Bank. The trade of this burgh cannot be considered extensive, being situate in an agricultural district, and principally depending thereupon; it is, however, greatly increased by the opening of the Great North of Scotland and Morayshire Railways, and has besides the advantage of steam communication to Aberdeen, Edinburgh and London. There is a woollen manufactory, which employs a good many hands. Of the other branches, a trade in corn, wool, and timber, is of some consequence, and there is a large tannery, whilst in the neighbourhood, are extensive lime works, and a millstone quarry.

Alexander II, in 1224, granted to the burgesses of Elgin a guild of merchants, which still continues, though the funds of the corporation were, for a considerable period, merged in the common good: connected with the guildry, there is a flourishing charity fund, from which decayed members and their families derive handsome pensions. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four baillies, and twelve councillors. The burgh joins with Banff, Cullen, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, in returning one member to parliament.

There are several mineral springs in the vicinity of Elgin, and from the healing virtues of their waters, with the salubrity of the climate, many are supposed to have derived considerable benefit. The weekly markets are Tuesdays and Friday. Fairs on the third Fridays in the months of February, March, and April; the second Friday in May, the first Tuesday in June, the third Tuesday in July, August, September, and October, and the third Wednesday in December. The feeing markets are held on the Friday before the 26th of May, and the Friday before 22nd of November; all (old style), except the December fair.

On the opposite bank of the Lossie is the small village of BISHOP MILL, the superior of which is the Earl of Seafield. It contains a few of the usual trades found in a country village, and two corn mills, and an assembly school.

LOSSIEMOUTH is a small village in the parish of Drainy, five miles north from Elgin, situated on the banks of the Lossie, at its influx with the Moray Firth, from which locality its name is derived. It is the seaport of Elgin, and is fast advancing into importance. A new harbour has been formed, which renders it a safe and commodious haven for shipping. The cost of this erection amounted to £20,000. An Act of Parliament was obtained in July, 1846, for a railway from Stotfield and Lossiemouth harbour, to Elgin, Rothes, and Craigellachie, called the 'Morayshire Railway.'

BURGHEAD is a small fishing village in the parish of Duffus, 8 miles W. from Elgin, and about 10 N.E. from Forres. It possesses a fine pier, and a safe and commodious harbour, well protected from the north and east winds; at high water steam vessels may enter with perfect safety; at neap tides it has eleven to twelve feet of water, and at spring tides fourteen to fifteen feet of water. This was anciently a Roman as well as a Danish station: the remains of a fort of the latter nation are still visible; also a well, dug out of the solid rock, which is known by the name of the Roman well. The occupation of the inhabitants is fishing for salmon, herring, and cod. Several steam ships, schooners, and sloops belong to this place, and land goods here for the surrounding country.

About 3 miles E. of Elgin, in the parish of St. Andrew's, is the neat village of LHANBRYDE, having a good inn, two millwrights, the same number of saw mills, a small woollen mill, a few well stored shops, a respectable boarding school, and an infant school. It is noteworthy for its geological productions, some valuable specimens of which are in the possession of Mr. Peter M'Kenzie.

FOCHABERS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF GARMOUTH, KINGSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FOCHABERS is a small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of Bellie, 52 miles E. by N. of Inverness, 12 S.W. of Cullen, 9 E. of Elgin, and 8 N.N.W. of Keith; situated on the great north road from Edinburgh and Aberdeen to Inverness, and occupying a rural site in a deep valley, through which the Spey runs at a little distance to the west of the town. The houses are neatly built, and the streets diverge from a square, in the centre of which stands the parish church, and near to it an Episcopalian chapel; there is also a large chapel for Roman Catholics. An elegant stone bridge, which crossed the Spey near the town, was partly swept away by the great floods which occurred in the summer of 1820; it has subsequently been rebuilt.

This is not an important town as respects trade. Its thoroughfare situation contributes somewhat to its prosperity, which is likewise assisted by the genteel neighbourhood by which it is surrounded. Fochabers is a burgh, and is governed by a baron baillie, appointed by the Duke of Richmond, whose seat (Gordon Castle) graces the vicinity of the town, and is the great object of attraction to, and admiration of, strangers. It is allowed to be one of the most magnificent structures, and, perhaps, the finest mansion north of the Firth of Forth. The edifice was originally a gloomy tower in the centre of a morass, called the Bog of Gight, and accessible only by a narrow causeway and a drawbridge. It is now a vast quadrangular structure, the front stretching to the length of 568 feet, surrounded by a beautiful park and equally beautiful country. It is approached by a gateway, at the west end of the town. The body of the building rises to the height of four lofty storeys, and on each end is a pavilion of two storeys, connected by a gallery of two lower storeys. The ancient tower, which is ninety feet high, overlooks the whole structure, and commands a view of the entire plain, with all its waving woods and the windings of the river Spey. The busts and pictures which grace the interior of this noble residence are most valuable, comprising many rare and original gems of art. At the eastern end of the town stands a new and elegant building, in the Elizabethan style of architecture—this is a free school founded by Alexander Milnes, Esq., a native of Fochabers. By his will, dated New Orleans, 17th of October, 1836, he bequeathed to the parishes of Bellie and Ordfish, the sum of 100,000 dollars for establishing a free school. The cost of erecting the building amounted to £4,338, out of a fund of £16,415—£15,000 being invested in heritable security, yielding an annual income of £680, by means of which five hundred children are educated.

The parish of BELLIE, of which Fochabers is the kirk town, is partly in this county and partly in Banffshire. It is six miles in length by four in breadth, bounded by the sea on the north, and on the south-east by Rathven and Boharm. The county of Moray comes here east of the Spey to a small extent, and on this piece of ground, which is in the parish of Bellie, stands the town of Fochabers. When William, Duke of Cumberland, was on his march to engage Prince Charles at Culloden, he slept a night in the manse of Bellie. Fairs are held at Fochabers on the third Wednesdays in January, the fourth Wednesdays in the months of March, May, October, and December, and the second Wednesday in August (all new style).

GARMOUTH and KINGSTON are small villages in the parish of Speymouth, between four and five miles N.W. of Fochabers—the former situated at the mouth of the Spey, on its left bank. The principal trade is in shipbuilding and the exportation of corn, coal, timber and salmon; of the latter considerable quantities are caught and sent principally to London and other southern markets. The imports are guano, bone-manure, timber and coal. The port has a good harbour, formed by the mouth of the Spey, and here a number of vessels have been built entirely of native wood. A fair is held on the 30th of June for cattle.

FORRES, FINDHORN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

FORRES is a royal burgh, the capital of the parish of its name, and the seat of a Presbytery; 201 miles N. by W. from Edinburgh, by way of Aberdeen, and 165 by way of Brechin and Huntly; 75 N.W. of Aberdeen, 27 N.E. of Inverness, 21 W. of Fochabers, 20 E. of Fort George, 12 W. by S. of Elgin, and 11 E. of Nairn. It is a neatly-built clean town, and stands on rising ground, at the distance of about five miles from the bay of Findhorn, which is its sea-port. Forres is noted for one of the most remarkable stone obelisks, of ancient date, in Britain. This interesting object stands at the east end of the town, and is supposed to commemorate a pacification concluded here between Malcolm II. and Sweno, a Danish invader, about the beginning of the eleventh century. It is an enormous slab of grey stone, upwards of twenty feet in height, supported by a socket which conceals at least three feet more, and it is believed to reach fourteen feet into the ground; the shape resembles that of a very long wedge, or, as some fancifully describe it, a Highland broad-sword: the figures upon the obelisk, which are presumed to represent a battle and subsequent treaty, are wonderfully distinct, considering that they must have withstood the assaults of wind and weather during the last eight centuries. At the western extremity of the town, on an eminence, once stood a castle, wherein Duffus, one of the early kings of Scotland, was perfidiously killed by Donwald, governor of the fortress; which circumstance, it is said, Shakespere has made use of in his dramatic version of the murder of King Duncan by Macbeth; and it was on the waste in the neighbourhood that that hero, along with Banquo (according to the old historians), met 'the weird sisters,' who gave him so many fatal promises. The exact spot on which that event is asserted by the country people to have taken place is marked by a small clump of trees, about two hundred yards north from the post-road between Forres and Nairn, near a toll-bar five miles from the former of these places, and nearly on the confines of the two counties of Moray and Nairn; the extensive heath still surrounding this place is visibly worthy of the epithet 'blasted,' being one of the most desolate tracts of waste land anywhere to be seen. On the castle eminence has been erected an obelisk to the memory of Dr. Taylor, who sacrificed his life by over-exertion in his attention to the wounded Russians, after the famous battle of Alma. Upon an eminence to the south-east of the town stands a tower erected by the inhabitants of Forres, in honour of Lord Nelson. From its elevated situation a fine view is hence obtained, and the object is a conspicuous one for a considerable distance. Sloping to the north where the river Findhorn sweeps round from the south-west through the forest of Dainaway is a modern mansion, the seat of the Earl of Moray. Adjoining to it is the old castle, a noble hall, built by Earl Randolph, regent of Scotland during the minority of David Bruce, capable of containing one thousand men under arms. Here Mary Queen of Scots held her court in 1566. In this part the heron is so numerous that whole flocks darken at times, it is said, the air, and drown with their cries the sound of the gushing waters. About two miles below, the river, which is the estuary of Findhorn bay, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge erected at the expense of government.

The trade of Forres is not of an extensive character. A distillery, a brewery, dye works, a woollen manufactory, and a capital hotel in the High-street, conducted by Mr. Fraser. There are four branch banking establishments. We may not omit mention of a register office for servants, under the patronage of the Highland Agricultural Society, instituted in 1838, and which is also a Government Emigration Office. The meetings of the Trafalgar Club are held in Forres annually, and there are two masonic lodges. Forres is a royal burgh and governed by a provost, three baillies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and seventeen councillors. The burgh unites with Nairn, Fortrose, and Inverness, in returning one member to parliament. A sheriff's small debt court sits once in every two months for the recovery of debts under £8. 6s. 8d. In the centre of the High-street is a handsome structure surmounted by a spire. The building comprises the gaol, a court-house, a council-room, &c. At the south-east end is a good stone edifice erected in 1824, called Anderson's Institution, for educating children of the humbler classes of Forres, Rafford, and Kinloss, founded by Jonathan Anderson, Esq., a native of Forres.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and for congregations of Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, and Independents.

The markets are held on Tuesday and Friday; and the fairs on the first Wednesday in January and July; the third Wednesdays in February, April, May, and November; and the fourth Wednesdays in August and September. Feeing markets for hiring servants are held on the Saturday before the 26th May (called Whitsunday market); and the Saturday before the 22nd November (called Martinmas market), all new style.

FINDHORN is a small village and sea-port in the parish of Kinloss, five miles north of Forres, of which it may be considered the port. It lies at the point of land which is rendered peninsular by the bay of Brough Head on the east, and the harbour of Findhorn on the west. The latter is convenient, and possesses a share of coasting trade in the exportation of salmon, corn, bark, potatoes, and wood; the latter article is principally shipped to Newcastle and Sunderland, where it is used for props in the coal pits. The imports consist of coal, guano, slate, tile, lime, and different kinds of goods. The curing of fish is an occupation extensively pursued here. The village boasts a good and comfortable inn—the Crown. An act of parliament has been obtained for the construction of a railway to Findhorn, and thus connect it with the Inverness and Aberdeen Junction Railway.

ROTHES.

IS a parish partly in the county of Elgin, and partly in that of Banff: it is bounded on the south and south-west by Aberlour and Knockando, and on the north by Elgin, Birnie, &c, and on the east by the river Spey; it is nine miles in length by an average breadth of three. The village, which is a considerable one, is about 54 miles W.N.W. from Aberdeen, and 10 s. from Elgin; situated near the western bank of the Spey. The name is derived from Ruddh-ius, signifying 'red water,' from the colour of the soil of which the banks of its streams are composed. The trades of the place are those usually found in a country village—if we may except two distilleries.

FIFESHIRE.

THIS is an extensive, populous, and important county, lying on the eastern side of Scotland; it is a peninsula, having the Frith of Forth on the south, the German Ocean on the east, and the Tay on the north, which river separates it from Forfarshire and Perthshire; on the west it is bounded by the latter county and Kinross, with a small part of Clackmannan. The breadth, from its eastern apex to its wes tern point, where it intersects Kinross and Perth, is about thirty-five miles; towards the south, however (from Kinghorn to the verge of Kinross-shire), it is not more than ten miles across: the extreme length, from north-east to south-west, in a curved line, is full forty miles. The regularity of its figure is much interrupted by the intrusion of Kinross-shire, which creates a considerable indentation, not far from its centre, on the west. Its superficies comprise 467 square miles, or 298,880 English acres; of cultivated land there are about 210,000 acres, and of uncultivated about 90,000; the lakes cover about three square miles.

EARLY HISTORY—At an early period the district of Fife included Kinross-shire, Clackmannanshire and part of the counties of Perth and Stirling; it was then designated Ross, a term signifying a peninsula, and seems to have then been under one general jurisdiction. This large territory has long since been dismembered—Clackmannan was first taken from it, and next Kinross was erected into a distinct shire. The origin of the name 'Fife' has much puzzled etymologists, nor has a satisfactory conclusion ever been arrived at upon this subject. The monkish chroniclers assume its derivation from one Fifus Duffus, a hero of whom nothing more appears to be known than that he was a chieftain who performed some great exploits, and did the country essential service in war. The ancient history of Fife is enveloped in nearly similar obscurity: its original possessors were the Celts, and their invaders the Romans; and, towards the close of the ninth century, the king of the Scots obtained paramount sway over the district. Between this period and the eleventh century, the country was in a great measure either the property or under the jurisdiction of a potent succession of 'thanes,' of the title of Macduff: one of these, Duncan Macduff, was created Earl of Fife by Malcolm the III. about 1057; and from this time, till the family honors were merged by the marriage of female heirs or extinction in other families, and finally lost by forfeiture in 1424, the Earls of Fife were amongst the most influential of the Scottish peerage. After the lapse of more than three centuries, the ancient title of Earl of Fife was revived as an Irish peerage, in 1759, in the person of William Duff, Lord Braco of Kilbryde, who, according to his genealogists, derived his descent from the original earls. The lineal descendant of this person now inherits the title and privileges—the estates of the family being situated principally in Aberdeenshire and Banffshire.

SOIL, SURFACE, AND CLIMATE.—The peninsula of Fife was originally almost an entire forest, full of swamps; and while in this condition was the haunt of wild beasts, especially swine of a monstrous size. It is understood that such animals were not extirpated in the reign of James V. who, like his forefathers, often made Fife the scene of his hunting expeditions. In this county are found four kinds of soils, differing considerably in quality, and generally occupying distinct tracts of country. Along the braes facing the Frith of Forth, the composition of the land is for the most part excellent—being deep rich loam, good clay, and gravel mixed with loamy earth, based chiefly on whin-rock; north from the waving line which bounds this territory to the base of the hills on the south side of the vale of Fife, and from St. Andrew's on the east to the western parts of the county, the soil is in general vastly inferior—a great proportion being cold, poor, and very wet clay; the tract of the 'Howe of Fife' consists of loam, partly deep and moist, and partly light and dry, with also a considerable proportion of moor and moss; in the hilly district, from the vale to the river Tay, the land is almost uniformly of the best description, having much rich loam, clay and gravel. Consequent upon the progressive operation of habitual and experimental cultivation, these primitive properties of the soil have been modified, improved or ameliorated, according to the system or means and perseverance of the agriculturist. The peninsula of Fife exhibits in its surface a series of vales stretching from west to east parallel with the sea on each side, and of greater or less dimensions: these vales, which, from the undulating character of the country, are in some places not so distinct as in others, are the basins of different small streams, which merge either in the Frith of Forth or St. Andrew's bay. The eminences of greatest altitude in Fifeshire are, Kelly-Law, 800 feet; Largo-Law, 1,020; East Lomond Hill, 1,260; and West Lomond Hill, 1,280, above the level of the sea. The CLIMATE of this peninsula is, perhaps, as genial and salubrious as that of other districts more to the south: the fogs, which formerly were continually exhaling from the lochs and marshes, to the injury of the crops and the health of the inhabitants, who were then afflicted with agues and other concomitant diseases, have long since been effectually dissipated by the drainage of the damp lands and the general spread of healthful cultivation. Altogether, Fife is a most important district: its agricultural prosperity and capabilities—its manufactures—its fisheries, and its mineral treasures—its burghs, sea-ports, and fine harbours—and its domestic and foreign commerce—form a combination of advantages that must distinguish this shire as one of the most favoured, probably, in all North Britain.

PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The shire is fortunate in possessing inexhaustible mines of coal, with whinstone, sandstone, limestone, and some ironstone. Coal and lime are wrought only in the southern division of the county, between the two extremities, and some miles inland; within this district there are as extensive lime and coal works as can be seen in Scotland. The sandstone found in this part is of the very best quality; from its beauty it is exported to Edinburgh, where some of the finest edifices have been built with it. Marl is abundant in some places—so likewise is fine clay, for the composition of bricks, tiles, and pottery. From the possession of the above fossils, and the exuberant, produce of corn and cattle, it is a common saying among the people of Fife, that their county could support itself better, without the aid of imported articles, than any other district in Scotland. Besides supplying home consumption, it enjoys a very large export trade in corn, potatoes, pigs, black cattle, lime, coal, and sandstone—not to mention that of its manufactured goods. Lead has been discovered in the western Lomond, and mines of this ore have been profitably worked in the parish of Kemback: pebbles, much admired for the high polish of which they are susceptible, have been found in different places; with agates and rubies of fine water. The staple MANUFACTURE of Fife is linen goods, in the weaving of which, whole towns, villages, and hamlets, are busily employed without intermission: fine diapers and shirtings, and the most elegant table-linen, are produced from the looms of this county; of this trade Dunfermline is the principal seat; while the yarns, composed of foreign flax, are mostly spun and bleached on the Leven and in the adjacent places. Blankets and plaidings are also manufactured in the shire, but not to an important extent.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—Exclusive of the Forth and the Tay, the county is watered by several streams—none of which, however, are entitled to the denomination of rivers, except the Eden and the Leven, both of which abound with excellent salmon. The principal railway lines that pass through Fifeshire are the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee; the Stirling and Dunfermline; and the Dunfermline and Charlestown railway, and the St. Andrew's line. The route of the respective lines will be best ascertained by reference to the towns given in the directory of the shire.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—This county forms a sheriffdom, under one sheriff depute; but, being divided into an eastern and a western district, each is placed under the jurisdiction of a sheriff substitute; in these two districts are comprehended the four subdivisions of St. Andrews, Cupar, Dunfermline, and Kirkcaldy. It has politically and ecclesiastically attached to it the islands of Inchcolm, Inchkeith, and May, in the Frith of Forth. Fife comprises sixty parishes, and two parts of parishes—having thirteen royal burghs with parliamentary representation; these, conjointly with Culross, in Perthshire—Queen's-ferry, in Linlithgowshire—and Stirling, in Stirlingshire—return three members; and the shire at large sends another to the senate.

ABERDOUR

Is a parish and village—the latter, which is also a sea-port, is 10 miles N. W. of Edinburgh (across the Frith of Forth), 8 from Kirkcaldy, and 3 from Burntisland, the nearest railway station, situated a few hundred yards from the Frith of Forth. This district formerly belonged to the monastery of Inchcolm; the small island of Inchcolm now belongs to the parish of Aberdour—the form of the latter is nearly square, measuring about three miles and a half each way; it lies along the north bank of the Forth, and is divided into two districts by a small ridge of hills, which runs from east to west, it is a place of considerable antiquity, and belonged in the twelfth century to the family of the Euponts, from which it passed to the Mortimers by marriage, and afterwards to the Douglasses, one of whom in 1457, was created Lord Aberdour and Earl of Morton, whose castle, which stood close to the village, was burnt down by accident upwards of a century ago. Aberdour has a good harbour, and it is the shipping port for Donibristle colliery: it is also a place of summer resort of the citizens of Edinburgh and their families, there being good bathing ground here, and the exposure being sunny and warm. One of the chief causes of its popularity as a bathing-place is the ready access which is obtained by steam vessels, and other means of conveyance from the opposite shore. In the village are the Established, Free and Episcopal churches the two former have schools attached to them.

ANSTRUTHER (EAST AND WEST), CELLARDYKES,

AND KILRENNY.

ANSTRUTHER EASTER, a royal burgh, in the county of Fife; is 22 miles E. from Kirkcaldy, and about 10 s. from St. Andrews. It was a place of great importance before the union with England, carrying on an extensive trade with Holland and France; and from its contiguity to Cellardykes, it is still one of the first fishing stations in Scotland. Fish curing is the staple trade; in 1825, there were only fifty-eight boats from 18 to 20 feet long; now the number is one hundred and sixty-two from 38 to 41 feet long, and from 28 to 34 long measurement. The harbour has been found too small for the increasing trade of the district; and the three burghs of East and West Anstruthers and Cellardykes, have united their efforts to obtain with government assistance, an union harbour, which is expected to cost £30,000, and which, with the present harbour, will give a space of 13½ acres, and will accommodate five hundred fishing boats, and admit vessels from 200 to 500 tons burthen at half flood; there will be seven feet of water at the East Quay at the lowest spring tide. The trade, in addition to fish curing, is of a domestic nature; baking, tanning, and fish-curing, are the most prominent branches, but there is likewise a considerable portion of business done in the export of grain, potatoes, &c. A number of coasters belong to the port, and a steam packet plies three times a week between it and Leith, conveying hence grain, fish, &c., and returning with merchants' goods. It is in contemplation to extend the East of Fife line from Kilconquhar to the projected union harbour of Anstruthers. It is the station of a custom-house, whose district extends to Crail. Branches of the National Bank of Scotland, the Eastern Bank of Scotland, and the Clydesdale Bank, are settled here. The town is governed by a provost and two bailies, a treasurer, and five councillors, elected under the Scotch Borough Reform Act. This burgh is united with St. Andrew's, Cupar, Crail, Kilrenny, Austruther Wester, and Pittenweem, in returning one member to parliament. It is worthy of note, that Dr. Chalmers, the celebrated orator and divine, and Professor Tennant, author of 'Anster Fair,' were natives of this town, and also Professor Goodsir of the Edinburgh University.

In addition to the Established church, there is a Free church, and United Presbyterian, and Independent and Baptist chapels; also a burgh school, and a free school for both sexes.

ANSTRUTHER WESTER, which adjoins Anstruther Easter, is also a royal burgh, and holds its charter of incorporation from James VI., in 1587; a bridge connects the two burghs. This burgh was disfranchised in 1853, when three managers were appointed by the Court of Session. The inhabitants are principally employed in agricultural pursuits. Great improvements have been effected in this town within the last forty years: among these must be noticed the widening of the main street from thirteen to thirty feet, its being macadamised, and the formation of a neat footway or pavement at an expense of £450, contributed equally by the burgh and the county; the place is supplied with water, the streets well lighted, common sewers and other conveniences constructed, whereby the public thoroughfares and lanes are kept in a clean and orderly state; a parish church, manse, and offices, for the clergyman; and a parochial school, and dwelling-house for the schoolmaster, have also been erected. Fairs were held on the first Tuesday after the 11st April, July 5th, and November 12th, but are discontinued.

The village of CELLARDYKES (or NETHER KILRENNY) is contiguous to Anstruther, before described. The three burghs are are so contiguous to each other, that to a stranger, the separation is not discernable. The greater number of the inhabitants are fishermen, and about one hundred and twenty boats belong to the place.

KILRENNY is a parish and royal burgh—the latter is situated one mile from Anstruther, and three from Crail. The parish approaches a circular form, having a diameter of about two miles. The coast here is one continued range of rocks, with two small creeks which form the harbour of Kilrenny, and the port of Cellardykes or Nether Kilrenny. Here is an established church and a parochial school. This burgh, in conjunction with the Anstruthers, and other places before named, returns one member to parliament.

POST OFFICE, EAST ANSTRUTHER, David M. Dickson, Post Master.—Letters (from EDINBURGH) from all parts, arrive every morning at eleven, and (from CRAIL) every evening at twenty minutes past seven; and are despatched thereto, every morning at ten minutes past eleven, and in the evening at half-past seven. Money Order Office open from nine in the morning till six in the evening.

AUCHTERDERRAN, LOCHGELLY, KINGLASSIE, BEATH,

COWDENBEATH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

AUCHTERDERRAN parish is four miles long and three broad. The soil is fertile, and only about a third is under tillage; the rest under pasture. The inhabitants, who assiduously apply themselves to agriculture, have much improved the condition and appearance of the district. A considerable bed of coal and ironstone traverses this parish.—LOCHGELLY, which is the principal village in the parish, is 8 miles N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and the same distance E. from Dunfermline. About one and a half miles from Lochgelly are the ruins of the castle of Lochore. A branch of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway passes close to this village and Cowdenbeath; and adjoining are four furnaces for smelting the iron ore, which is here raised in abundance, also one at LIMPHINNANS, about one mile distant. A branch of the Union Bank of Scotland is established in the village, The places of worship in this village are a Free church, a chapel of ease, and a United Presbyterian chapel; but the Established church is at the hamlet of AUCHTERDERRAN, two miles distant. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Thursday in April (o. s.), the third Wednesdays in July and September, and the first Thursday in November.

The parish of KINGLASSIE extends four miles in length, by two in breadth at its narrowest part, and four at its broadest. It is watered by the Lochty and the Ore, tributary streams of the Leven. On the first of these, stands the irregular village of Kinglassie, which is two miles from Leslie, and 3½ N.E. from Lochgelly. There are quarries of freestone; and the coal obtained in this parish is considered about the best in the county. The inhabitants of the village are principally supported by the coal and iron works in the locality. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church. A fair is entitled to be held on the third Wednesday in May, and on the Thursday before Michaelmas (o. s).

AUCHTERMUCHTY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AUCHTERMUCHTY, signifying in Gaelic 'the Cottage of the King,' is a parish and a royal burgh—the latter 22 miles from Dundee, 19 from St. Andrews, 14 from Perth, 5 from Newburgh, 15 miles from Kirkcaldy, and 28 miles, nearly due north, from Edinburgh. A station of the Fife and Kinross railway is adjacent to the town, distant 4 miles from Ladybank—a station and junction on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway. The land in the vicinity of the town is remarkably rich and fertile, and the climate is considered very salubrious. It is situated on the road from Kinross to Cupar Fife, ten miles from the former and nine from the latter town. Auchtermuchty is irregularly built—many of the houses are thatched and low, but the greater proportion are of a superior appearance. There is a good substantial mansion-house in the town, which was once the residence of the Thane of Fife. A stream of water called Loverspool runs through the town, dividing it into nearly two equal parts. This place was constituted a royal burgh by James IV., which charter was confirmed by James VI., and it still enjoys all the privileges arising therefrom. It is governed by a provost, two baillies, nine councillors, a treasurer, and town clerk, and has a sheriff's small debt court, which is held quarterly. Mrs. Tyndal Bruce, of Grange and Falkland, is patron of the parish, and a large proprietor in it. There is a castle on one of her estates, which was built by the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scotland. A considerable trade is carried on here in manufacturing linen and cotton goods for Dunfermline, Dundee, and Kirkcaldy houses, and this forms the principal business of the place. Malting is carried on here to a very large extent; one maltster is said to be the most extensive of his class in Scotland. There are branches respectively of the Union Bank of Scotland, and a bank for savings.

The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, three United Presbyterian chapels, and one for Baptists. The parish church is an old structure, lately enlarged, and situated near the centre of the town. Schools are connected with the parish church and the Free church. Of late years a large building was erected, and conducted on the Madras principle, and is numerously attended. The heritors of the parish have just completed a new parish school, with every facility for teaching, &c.; it is 75 feet in length by 21 in breadth; and it can be divided into three apartments or class-rooms, by two sliding partitions. It was erected at an expense of upwards of £700. Fairs are held on the 1st Monday in February, last Monday in April, July 2nd, 1st Monday in October and December.

BURNTISLAND.

BURNTISLAND is a parish, a royal burgh, and a sea-port or creek—the latter six miles from Kirkcaldy, 2½ W. of Kinghorn, and 3 miles E. from Aberdour, and eight from Edinburgh. It is the terminus of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway, and is situated on the shore of the Frith of Forth, well sheltered by hills, which rise towards the north in an amphitheatrical form. The parish of Burntisland was anciently called Kingorne Wester; and that part of the town now called the Kirkton, was the original town, the parish church and burying ground was there, the ruins of the former are still to be seen, and the latter is still used as a burying ground. The town was originally a burgh of regality under the Abbot of Dunfermline. In the year 1541 it was purchased from him by James VIth., and erected into a burgh royal, confirmed by James VIth, 1587, and renewed by Charles Ist, 1632. Since the passing of the burgh reform act; the parliamentary burgh includes the Castle, Kirkton, and intermediate grounds. Anciently the burgh was managed by twenty one councillers, including a provost, three bailies, dean of guild, and treasurer. But at the present time its magistracy consist only of twelve councillers, including a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild and a treasurer, and in connexion with Dysart, Kirkcaldy and Kinghorn, returns one member to parliament. The only building of antiquity in the burgh deserving of notice is Rossend castle, it was often the resting place of the unfortunate Queen Mary, on her journeys to Falkland, and a room in the castle is still shown as the Queen's room. The east end of the town in former days, was entered by an archway erected at the east end of High street, and closed with gates; this was taken down about 30 years ago. The town-house built in the year 1626, stood at the foot of High-street, it was also taken down some years since, and a new and handsome structure, with a steeple and clock, was erected at the corner of Kirkwynd, with suitable apartments for the courts. The harbour is reckoned the best in the Frith, being both capacious and of great depth of water; it has also an excellent dry dock; and a light-house stands on the entrance to the haven. The basin of the harbour is said to have been originally formed by Cromwell, whose dyke or wall, running from the foot of Rossend Castle to the island, is still extant. About the middle of the 17th century, the harbour was repaired and improved by the inhabitants with some assistance from the convention of burghs; before the union, the commerce was considerable, and in the 17th century, it carried on an extensive traffic with Holland. From its being the terminus of the railway before mentioned, it has now become a place of considerable importance—the population in the course of the last few years being doubled, and the revenue of the burgh much increased. The town has been greatly indebted to Sir John Gladstone, Bart., of Fasque, through whose public spirit and enterprise a substantial and commodious low-water pier was erected, making Burntisland a ferry station between Fife and Midlothian. The pier, with the right of ferry, has been sold to the railway company who have stationed a number of excellent steamers on the passage. The company have also erected an ingenious apparatus by which they are enabled to run the railway trucks off the lines into the steamers without damage or displacement of the goods. From the excellent position of Burntisland as a seaport town—secure from almost every wind that blows, its excellent bathing ground, and its contiguity to Edinburgh, it has now become a fashionable summer residence—the main street and the surrounding walks presenting in the summer months a gay and animated appearance. To the east of the town are the links, much resorted to for golfing and promenading.

An arrangement was made with the railway company, by the officials of the burgh, regarding a commutation of customs and shore dues, whereby they secured to the town a revenue of £1,000 a year on the railway traffic; they likewise bound themselves by act of parliament to expend two-thirds of this sum in deepening and improving the harbour, the railway company, on their part, agreeing to expend £25,000 in carrying the head of the harbour further into the sea, but which has never been carried into effect. A substantial middle pier runs out into the harbour for the purpose of accommodating vessels of large tonnage. Since the railway was opened, the traffic in coal and iron has greatly increased, and is steadily increasing, in consequence of which, a great want of berthage for vessels is felt,—to obviate which, and to afford greater facilities for shipping, plans of an outer harbour, and breakwater on the west side of the entrance, were submitted to the magistrates and council of the burgh by an eminent engineer, by which six loading berths will be obtained. These plans were subsequently agreed to and contract entered into for the due execution of the work, which is now almost completed, at an expense of upwards of £9,000: the breakwater extends seaward about 560 feet, completely protecting the harbour from S.W. and W. winds, the only winds to which the harbour is exposed. The new quay wall on the east side, extends about 350 feet, running parallel with the point of the breakwater, and will form loading berths for large vessels—there being twenty-four feet of water at high water, spring tides, and nine feet at the lowest ebb of spring tides. The Customs jurisdiction of this creek under the port of Kirkcaldy, extends from Pettycur to Aberdour. The town consists of one long main street with smaller diverging thoroughfares, well paved and gas lighted. Herring curing, cooperage, and the shipping of coal and iron, are the chief branches of trade. Messrs. Young & Co.'s distillery at Grange, about a mile from the town, is celebrated for the purity of spirits manufactured there. The greatest want of the town at the present time is that of a sufficient supply of good water. The council have for years been attempting to obtain this, and it is understood that they are now on the eve of completing arrangements for this important purpose. A branch of the 'National Bank of Scotland was opened about six years ago. Sir John Gladstone erected a number of handsome villas on the east of the links, called Gladstone terrace. Lamberlaws, signifying 'hills on the sea,' a beautiful rising knoll commanding a splendid view of the Frith and the city of Edinburgh, is now covered with elegant villas and gardens. A large and elegant hall has lately been erected at the expense of Joseph Young, Esq. of Dunearn for concerts, lectures, and other public meetings, and has been found of great use to the community.

The places of worship are the parish church—which was built about the end of the sixteenth century, but was not established the parish church till 1632; it is a commodious and venerable edifice, overlooking the sea—an United Presbyterian chapel, and a Free church; the Episcopalians have at present only a temporary place of worship, but they have now in course of erection a church, an elegant design in the Gothic style, with parsonage and school adjoining. There are parochial, Free, and Episcopal church schools; a subscription library and news rooms, and a Young Men's Institute for the purpose of giving lectures on various subjects, and also a number of friendly associations are connected with the town. No market days are observed. A fair is held here on the 10th of July (new style).

CERES AND KEMBACK.

CERES (or Cryus), is a parish and village—the former situated on an acclivity nearly three miles S. E. from Cupar Fife. The parish is eight miles long and from one to four in breadth; the surface is hilly, but in general is subject to agriculture. On the north it is bounded by Cupar parish, on the east is Cameron, on the south Largo, and on the west Cults. Flax spinning and weaving a few linen fabrics employ some of the inhabitants of the parish. The old house of Scotstarvet, once the family residence of the Scots, one of whom wrote a remarkable little work entitled—'The Staggering State of Scots Statesmen,' is within the parish, and occupies a conspicuous situation on the top of the high grounds, which bound the house of Fife on the east. The house contains a museum of antiquities and curiosities. The parish church, which stands in an elevated situation, has a castellated square tower, which is seen at a considerable distance. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in March, the 24th June, and the 20th October.

The parish of KEMBACK is nearly of triangular figure, with its broadest side to the Eden, and measures about three and a half miles in breadth, and length. It is one of the richest and most beautiful districts in the country; out of 1850 acres more than 1500 are fine arable land, and there are many fine plantations in different parts of the parish. Besides the Eden it is watered by the Ceres stream. The church stands about a mile and a half from Ceres village, and three from Cupar. Fairs last Tuesday in March, second Thursday in June, and second Thursday in October.

CRAIL AND KINGSBARNS.

CRAIL is a parish, a royal burgh, and a sea-port—the latter 26 miles E. from Kirkcaldy, and 10 S.E. from Saint Andrews. It was anciently called Caryle or Cairraile, and is mentioned by old historians as a town of considerable note, so early as the middle of the ninth century; its importance in later days has, however, greatly declined, and notwithstanding it possesses great capabilities as a port, it enjoys but very little trade; this, in some measure, may be ascribed to the inconvenience of its harbour, for it is eligibly situated. Its principal exports consist of grain and potatoes: the imports are chiefly coals. The town consists of two streets, and two or three lanes; of the former, one is broad and spacious, containing some good houses—several of which are of that massive and antique description which indicate past wealth. Crail was erected into a royal burgh by Robert Bruce; and it is governed by a provost, two baillies, and a treasurer (in all nine councillors; in conjunction with St. Andrews, Cuper Fife, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, and Pittenweem, it returns one member to parliament. The parish church, Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel, are the places of worship. The celebrated James Sharp, archbishop of St. Andrews, was once minister of the church, and his hand-writing is still to be seen in the session records.

The parish of KINGSBARNS lies in the eastern part of the county, with its eastern side to the German ocean—originally it formed part of Crail, but was separated from that parish in 1631. The village lies a mile to the south, on the public road round the coast, 6½ miles S.E. from St. Andrews, and 3½ N. from Crail. The largest and best flag-stones in the country are obtained near the village, and marble of a fine quality is met with occasionally. A little to the east of the harbour are the fragments of a castle or palace, once the residence of David I., the remains of which consist chiefly of a wall, now partially enclosing a garden. Pitmilly, a very ancient seat, stands in the northern part of the parish. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in June, and the third Wednesday in October (old style).

POST OFFICE, CRAIL, James Key, Post Master.—Letters from SAINT ANDREWS, and places NORTH and SOUTH, arrive morning at twenty-five minutes past eleven, and (from LEVEN) at a quarter to twelve noon; and are despatched to ST. ANDREWS, &c., including KINGSBARNS, at twenty minutes to one in the afternoon, and to LEVEN for EDINBURGH and all parts at a quarter to seven in the evening.

Money Order Office open from nine in the morning till six in the evening.

POST OFFICE, KINGSBARNS, Thomas Anderson, Post Master.—Letters from SAINT ANDREWS arrive daily at ten minutes past eleven noon; and are despatched at ten minutes past one in the afternoon.

Letters from CRAIL arrive at ten minutes past one in the afternoon.

CUPAR FIFE AND DAIRSIE.

CUPAR (popularly designated CUPAR FIFE, to distinguish it from Cupar-Angus, on the borders of Perthshire,) is a royal burgh, the capital of the county of Fife; 32 miles N. (by rail) from Edinburgh, 14½ S. from Dundee, 9 W. from St. Andrews, and the same distance N.E. from Falkland; pleasantly situated on the left bank of the Eden, and on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway. It is a place of considerable antiquity, but in the present day, its aspect is that of a modern thriving town, nor are there any ancient remains to be discerned in or about Cupar. Of its castle, so frequently alluded to in Scottish history, not a vestage is now visible; the Castle hill, where that fortress once stood (in which the plays of Sir David Lindsay, and the 'Satire of the Three Estates,' were acted in 1555), has been for some time occupied with schools; and the spot which once resounded with the clangour of arms is now devoted to learning. The principal streets of the town are the Crossgate, the Bonnygate, and St. Catherine street, which last is built on the plan of the houses in the New Town of Edinburgh—in this street are the county buildings, the news rooms, library, and the two principal hotels, (of these, the 'Royal' will be found in every department it professes, to afford ample accommodation to its visitants—it being fitted up with baths, and billiard room, &c.; also adjoining it, is the largest posting establishment in the county. Opposite the county buildings is an Episcopal chapel, in the Grecian style; it site is clearly that of a convent of Dominican or Black Friars, in old records described as being situated to the east end of the town. The streets and shops are lighted with gas, supplied by a company established in 1830. On the north side of the river is the old prison, said to resemble the old gaol of Glasgow; it is now used as stores and depot for the Fife Militia Artillery, a more commodious edifice having been erected for a gaol, on rising ground, a little to the north of the Dundee road. The principal trade of Cupar arises from the linen manufacture; but there are also other prosperous branches, as those of brewing, tanning, coach-making, &c., and of all the various necessary and domestic avocations a due proportion. There are six branch banks—one of the 'British Linen Company,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Clydesdale Banking Company,' the 'Royal Bank of Scotland,' the 'City of Glasgow Bank,' and the 'National Bank,' together with a Bank for Savings. Three newspapers are published in Cupar weekly — the 'Herald' and the 'Journal' on Thursday, and the 'News' on Saturday.

As a royal burgh, Cupar is governed by a provost, three bailies, and a dean of guild, with a treasurer and twenty-one councillors: in conjunction with St. Andrews, the Anstruthers, Crail, Kilrenny, and Pittenweem, the burgh returns one member to parliament. Being the county town, and head burgh of the shire, the public business relating to both is transacted at Cupar; and here, consequently, reside a considerable number of practitioners before the courts of the shire. The ordinary sheriff court, and the commissary courts, are held every Tuesday and Thursday during session; and the sheriff small debts court on the first and third Tuesdays of each month during the same period.

The places of worship are the parish church and a chapel in connexion therewith, and others for the Free church, United Presbyterian, and Episcopalian congregations. The schools of Cupar are of the best class, and are supplied with able teachers in all the useful branches of education; and a public library, well stocked with books in the various branches of literature and science, evidences the polished taste of the inhabitants. The weekly market a good one for corn, is held on Tuesday, and a cattle market on the first Tuesday in every month.

DAIRSIE is a parish and village—the latter a small one, is situated on the main road from Cupar to Dundee, three miles from the former and eight from the latter town. The river Eden, which intersects the parish, is crossed by a good bridge of three arches, the erection of Archbishop Spotteswood, who was the proprietor of the Dairsie estate. The church, which is in the Saxon style of architecture, and surmounted by a neat spire, was erected at the commencement of the seventeenth century. Dairsie castle, now a ruin, is noted as having been the residence of Archbishop Sharp, as well as the place where a parliment was called upon to assemble in the year 1335. Chapel well, in this parish, in high repute for the healing properties of its waters, is the site of a Roman Catholic chapel, of which no remains are visible. This parish is nearly three miles in extent each way; with little exception, the whole is fine arable land, and freestone and whinstone abound beneath its surface.

POST OFFICE, Cross-gate, CUPAR, George Tod, Post Master.—Letters from all parts, EDINBURGH, and the SOUTH, arrive every morning at seven, nine, and twenty minutes to twelve, and in the afternoon at ten minutes past five; and are despatched every morning at a quarter-past six, and in the afternoon at a quarter to three.—Letters from DUNDEE and the NORTH arrive every morning at seven, and in the afternoon at twenty minutes before four; and are despatched every morning at half-past eight, and in the afternoon at a quarter to three.—Letters from DAIRSIE, CERES, PITLESSIE, and SPRINGFIELD, arrive every afternoon at a quarter before three; and are despatched at half-past eight in the morning.

Money Order Office open from nine in the morning till six in the evening.

DUNFERMLINE

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF CROSSFORD, HALBEATH, TOWN HILL, WELLWOOD, SPITTAL, MILES MARK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNFERMLINE is a city and a royal burgh, and the seat of a presbytery—the capital of its parish, the chief town in the western part of Fife, and the most important in the scale of manufactures in the county, its ancient title of city is now revived; it is 16 miles N. W. from Edinburgh, 47 N.E. from Glasgow, 31 S.S.W. from Cupar, 14 miles from Alloa, 21 from Stirling, 15 from Kirkcaldy, and 6 from North Queen's ferry, situate on rising ground, three miles north from the Firth of Forth, and three hundred feet above its level at which connected effect a means of transit to Stirling and

Limekilns, the nearest part of the coast. Thus elevated it commands a prospect remarkably various and beautiful, extending over fourteen different counties, and comprising a fine marine view on the south, and its salubrious situation renders it one of the healthiest cities in Scotland. A branch of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway comes to the town, and affords direct communication with nearly all parts of the county; also a branch of the Edinburgh and Glasgow, and Dundee railway connected effect a means of transit to Stirling and the west; whilst another line about 3 miles in length, hence to Charlestown, is used principally in the conveyance of coal for shipment at that port. It is now joined to the Stirling and Dunfermline railway at the Colton junction. The west of Fife mineral railway runs from the town north into the rich mineral district which contains immense quantities of coal, whinstone, lime, and other minerals and comparatively as yet untouched. At an early period Dunfermline became a royal residence: Malcolm Canmore usually resided at a tower, or castle, built on a peninsulated hill in a valley near the town; a palace was afterwards erected not far from the tower, in a most romantic situation—the south-west wall still remains a monument of the magnificence of the fabric of which it formed a part. The monastery, one of the most ancient in Scotland, was founded by Malcolm Canmore for monks of the Benedictine order, and was completed by his son, Alexander I: it continued to be governed by a prior till the reign of David I, who raised it to the dignity of an abbey, and, in 1124, translated thither thirteen monks from Canterbury. The abbey was richly endowed, and derived its revenues from very distant parts of the kingdom; it was an imposing and extensive building, but fell a sacrifice to the plundering army of Edward I, on his insidious intervention in the affairs of Scotland, about the commencement of the sixteenth century all that survived of this venerable pile was the church, with a few cells for the monks; these were demolished at the reformation. The city consists of streets, stretching from east to west, with a number of smaller streets, crossing down-hill at right angles, or proceeding in a northerly direction. The houses along the leading thoroughfares are nearly all well built, and have somewhat of a metropolitan air; surveying the spires, and other eminent points in an external view of the place, it presents the contour of a venerable city. Within the last five-and-forty years its size has been greatly increased, not only by the extension of the cross streets, but by the addition of a large suburb to the west and east, and during the last seventeen years the improvements effected have been considerable. The streets are gas-lighted by a company; and the town is abundantly supplied with excellent water, conveyed through pipes from the springs on the high ground, to the north of the town. Fire plugs on the gravitation principle are placed in numerous places throughout the streets and lanes. Perhaps the most prominent public building in the town, if we except the edifices for religious purposes, is the County Buildings, once called the Guildhall; stands on the south side of the High street, and are constructed in the Grecian style, with a spire one hundred and thirty-two feet in height rising over the front. They contain a sheriff court room, justice of peace court room, and a suite of rooms for the sheriff, sheriff clerk's office, procurator fiscal's, and other county business. In this is also the Post Office, Savings Bank, Public Library, and reading rooms. The Music Hall is a large modern erection, used for all kinds of public meetings. The upper Hall is a noble looking room of 90 feet in length, 50 in width, and 45 in height. The lower Hall is fitted up as the city theatre, and is usually occupied by a company from the metropolitan theatres from three to four months in the year. It is also used as the Corn Exchange every Tuesday; its area is nearly the same as the Hall above. The building has commodious ante-rooms and other conveniences; it was erected by Mr. William Clark jun., to supply a want for a Public Hall long felt. Next is the Town Hall at the corner of Bridge and Kirkgate streets it is likewise surmounted by a tower and spire of considerable altitude: it contains the town clerk's offices, a court room, council chambers, and police offices. The other public buildings comprise the prison, the workhouse, and fever hospital—all of which occupy sites at the eastern extremity of the town. The burgh of Dunfermline, it appears, was held of the monastery, which formerly possessed paramount jurisdiction and exclusive privileges here, for nearly two centuries; and became royal by a charter from James VI, dated 24th May, 1588; in this document the monarch ratifies sundry charters, donations and indentures, by John and Robert, abbots of Dunfermline, particularly one dated the 10th of October, 1395, by which the abbot and convent renounce, in favour of the eldermen and community, the whole income of the burgh belonging to their revenue, with the small customs, profits of court, &c. 'reserving, however, the power of punishment, should any of the magistrates be guilty of injustice in the exercise of their office.' In 1724 the burgh was placed on the footing it still maintains as respects its government, which is vested in a provost, two bailies, and a dean of guild, together with a treasurer, a chamberlain, and a town clerk, the council is composed of twenty-two members, elected pursuant to the terms of the Municipal Reform Act. The burgh joins with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, and Queen's ferry in sending one member to parliament. Dunfermline is constituted the seat of a sheriff substitute for the western district of Fife; he holds a weekly court on Fridays during the session; and police and small debt courts are held every Wednesday, and over which the borough magistrates preside.

The constantly increasing population and prosperity of Dunfermline may be entirely ascribed to its manufacture of table linens—this branch took root in the town about the commencement of the last century; the cloth is woven of all dimension, of the most elegant patterns, and to a greater extent than in any other town in Great Britain, and many firms are engaged in this business. There are establishments for the spinning of linen yarn, and several large factories where steam and hand-loom weaving is carried on. It is said that the chest of the incorporation of weavers contains two curious specimens of their art: a man's shirt wrought in the loom by a weaver of the name of Inglis, and a woman's shift, by another named Meldrum, both of which are without seam, and effected without the assistance of the needle; the only part which Inglis could not accomplish was a button for the neck. Exclusive of the linen trade, there are other branches of magnitude and importance—amongst which may be mentioned, iron and brass founding, and iron-forging, brewing, soap boiling, dyeing and the manufacture of tobacco. The coal trade is very extensive, and large quantities of this article are annually exported. Four branch banks of the first respectability are established here, and a bank for savings. There are three principal inns and many other comfortable houses for public accommodation of lesser note. The commercial hotel in Douglas street the nearest to the railway station, is a respectable and well conducted establishment either for commercial gentlemen or tourists. Milne's hotel in Bridge street, is also a good and convenient establishment suitable for families and commercial gentlemen, both of these have posting in connection. The parish abounds with valuable mines and minerals; in many places there are rocks of white freestone, and whinstone for paving the streets is in sufficient supply; limestone has been wrought very extensively, and iron stone is a plentiful article throughout this locality.

The parish church has been collegiate, and under the care of two ministers, since 1645. Of the other places of worship, their situations, and the respective officiating clergymen, will be found under a distinct head in a succeeding page. The secession church (now the United Presbyterian) which has extended over the greater part of Great Britain, became conspicuous here at an early period of its history—the Rev. Ralph Erskine, one of the parochial clergymen of Dunfermline, being one of the four ministers who first seceded from the establishment in 1773, and shortly after founded Queen Ann-street church here, which, it is believed, was the first or second of that denomination. The most elegant building here of modern erection is the Abbey Church: it is of ornamental Gothic architecture surmounted by a massive tower, one hundred feet high. The interior of the church is much admired. While excavating the foundation, the workmen discovered the tomb of that celebrated monarch, King Robert the Bruce, 490 years after his death: his remains were collected and enclosed in a leaden coffin and reinterred under the tower; adjoining the new is part of the old Abbey Church, where many other Scottish monarchs and nobles lie buried. The town and neighbourhood support many friendly societies. There are two superior schools the 'Dunfermline grammar school,' and the 'Dunfermline academy;' also Lancasterian, infants' and sabbath schools, and several private academies; two public libraries, a subscription news room; mechanics' and scientific institutions; bible, tract, missionary, and other religious societies; a horticultural society, and various charitable associations.

The markets are held on Tuesday and Friday—the former principally for grain, which is disposed of by stock and sample. Fairs the third Tuesday in January, March, April, June, July, September, October, and November.

DYSART

AND PATH-HEAD, WITH SAINT CLAIRTOWN, GALLATOWN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DYSART is a parish and a royal and parliamentary burgh—the town is situated two miles from Kirkcaldy, on a gentle declivity towards the Firth of Forth. It consists of three streets, with a sort of square in the centre, where stands the town-house, a building at one period of much greater importance to the commercial uses of the town than it is at the present day. The central street contains many substantial houses, but of very antique appearances. The streets are gas-lighted by a company formed in 1843. So early as 1546 Dysart is mentioned as one of the principal trading towns on the coast of Fife, and was much noted for the manufacture and export of salt. The alteration in commerce consequent on the union of 1707, destroyed the ancient legitimate trade, which was succeeded by smuggling; and this contraband traffic, in its turn, has also been annihilated. The trade it now enjoys is respectable, and consists in the weaving of ticks, checks, and similar fabrics. There is a large power-loom factory in the burgh, giving employment to several hundreds of the inhabitants, besides an extensive flax spinning mill and in the vicinity are mines of coal, extensively wrought, besides a considerable trade in ship building. The harbour is good, and there is a small floating dock; also a patent slip capable of taking up vessels of 400 tons burthen, the only one on this part of the coast. Coal is the principal export. Dysart was created a royal burgh in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but the original charter is lost. It is governed by a provost, two bailies, and six councillors—in all nine; and joins with Kirkcaldy, Kinghorn, and Burntisland, in returning one member to parliament.

The places of worship are the Established church, Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel. Parochial, industrial, and infants' schools, a newsroom, and a mechanics' institute, are in the town. The most remarkable object of antiquity near the town is the castle of Ravenscraig, standing on a rock projecting into the sea; it was inhabited in Oliver Cromwell's time, and was assaulted by a party of his troops: it has for many years been deserted, and time has reduced it to a ruinous state. Dysart gives the title of Earl to a branch of the Murrays of Tullibardine. The Earl of Roslyn has a seat in the neighbourhood. Fairs are held on the 6th of May, the third Tuesday in June, the fourth Wednesday in August, and on the 8th of November.

PATH-HEAD is a large village in the parish and parliamentary burgh of Dysart, situated chiefly on the face of a hill, looking towards the Frith of Forth. It extends nearly to the town of Kirkcaldy, and is divided into three districts, respectively named PATH-HEAD, GALLATOWN, and SAINT CLAIRTOWN. Dowlas, ticks, &c. are manufactured by several establishments within the district; and in Path-head is a very extensive floor-cloth manufactory. The building in which this business is conducted is of great magnitude, and forms a conspicuous object from a distance, both to the traveller by railway and the sea voyager. The cloth is made here from half a yard to eight yards wide, and is generally kept ten months or so in the factory before sent into the market, that length of time being required to dry or season it. At Saint Clairtown is an earthenware manufactory, and a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland. The places of worship are an Established church, two Free churches, and a meeting house for Baptists. A commodious school-house was erected in Path-head some years since by the trustees of the late Robert Philp, Esq. of Kirkcaldy; and in 1849, an auxiliary parochial or subscription school was opened, also a subscription school in Clairtown and Gallatown.

POST OFFICE, DYSART, Margaret Dick, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive (from KIRKCALDY) every morning at five minutes before nine, and afternoon at half-past five, and are despatched thereto in the afternoon at twenty minutes to three, and at twenty minutes to ten at night.

POST OFFICE, ST. CLAIRTON, David Dryburgh, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from KIRKCALDY) every morning at a quarter before nine, and evening at ten minutes past five, and are despatched thereto in the afternoon at three, and a quarter before ten at night.

 Letters for PATH-HEAD, ST. CLAIRTOWN, and GALLATOWN, should be addressed Path-head, Kirkcaldy.

The nearest Money Order office is at Kirkcaldy.

FALKLAND AND FREUCHIE.

FALKLAND is a parish—the small ancient town of its name is a burgh of barony 25 miles N. from Edinburgh, 23 S. from Dundee, 15 S.E. from Perth, the same distance N.N.W. from Kinghorn, 10 S.W. from Cupar, 3 from Auchtermuchty and Strathmiglo, and the same distance from the Falkland road station of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway. It is situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north side of the Lomond hills, which shelter it completely from the winds to the south. Falkland consists principally of one street, the eastern part of which is broad and spacious, but towards the west is narrow and inconvenient. The few good houses in the town are of an antique character, without any pretensions to architectural excellence. The palace is the only building worthy of the notice of a stranger; this, for a long time, was only ruin, but was rescued from total decay and repaired by the late Mr. Bruce, of the state-paper office. The excellence of the workmanship still delights the eye of the antiquarian, and gives an idea of what the building once was. The royal family of Scotland resided here occasionally: James V. died here in 1542. A dungeon is shown, in which it is said the Duke of Rothesay was starved to death by his uncle Albany. Tradition reports that this victim of oppression was supported for a length of time by two females, the wives of tradesmen of Falkland, one of whom supplied bread to him through a chink in the wall of the prison, while the other conveyed the milk from her breast by means of an oaten reed; being at length discovered, these supplies were cut off, and he perished of hunger. In 1615, it is said, the famous Rob Roy garrisoned the palace with a party of the Macgregors, and laid the country under heavy contributions for miles round, until at length he retired with a great booty.

The town was erected into a burgh by James II. in 1458, and its charter was confirmed and renewed by James VI. in 1595, in order (in the words of the charter) to 'obviate the damage and inconvenience sustained, for want of innkeepers and victuallers, by the many prelates, peers, barons, nobles, and others of their subjects, who come to their country seats.' The magistracy consists of three baillies, a treasurer, a town clerk, and fourteen councillors. A town hall was erected in 1801, in which balls and other public assemblages take place. A large common, which belonged to Falkland, and on which the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle, &c. was some years ago divided among the heritors, and is nearly all enclosed. The chief occupation of the industrious class is weaving, and the product of their looms is consigned to a number of resident agents for manufacturing houses. The Lomond hills in this district are shaped like a cone, the eastern Lomond, which is the most regular and beautiful, is about 1,650 feet above the level of the sea, and appears to have been fortified. The west Lomond is higher, and has on its top a large cairn or heap of loose stones.

The places of worship are a parish church, a Free church, and a chapel for Independents. The Parish church was erected some years ago, through the liberality of the late O. T. Bruce, Esq., at an expense, it is said, of £7,000; it is a handsome structure, surmounted by an elegant spire; and to perpetuate the memory of this gentleman a monument has been erected on Nett Hill, near the Lomonds, and can be seen at a great distance. A very handsome fountain was likewise constructed in the centre of the town by the above gentleman, who did much to contribute to the welfare and improvement of this place. A parochial school has been established by the heritors; and there are other schools, including one for infants. Fairs are held in the parish on the second Tuesday in January, third Tuesday in March, second Monday in May, third Friday in June, first Thursday in August, last Tuesday in September, and Friday before Hallow fair, in November. The August fair is an extensive one for cattle, and is attended by many English dealers.

FREUCHIE is a village in the parish of, and about two miles east from Falkland. The inhabitants, like those of that town, are principally employed in weaving linen goods. A small flax mill and a Presbyterian chapel are in the village.

POST OFFICE, FALKLAND, Robina Reidie, Post Mistress.—Letters from all parts arrive every morning at ten to eleven, and evening at ten to seven, and are despatched at five in the morning, and afternoon at thirty-five minutes past one.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG, WITH NEWPORT, WOODHAVEN, FORGAN AND LEUCHARS.

FERRY-PORT-ON-CRAIG, or TAYPORT. This parish is five miles in length, by from half a mile to a mile in breadth—stretching along the sea, at the mouth of the Tay, where the land rises into a hilly range, extending westwards. The village is five miles from Dundee, seated at the base of the hills opposite to Broughty village. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway terminates here, and passengers are forwarded by steam-boat to Broughty Ferry, and thence by rail to Dundee, both on the north bank of the Tay. For facilitating the shipping of goods, the railway company have constructed a dock and thrown out a pier; the latter can be approached by the steamers at all times of the tide. A great part of the village is composed of new houses, some of which are suited to the accomodation of visiters, who resort hither from the inland parts of the country for the benefit of sea-bathing—the beach here being naturally well formed for the purpose: but the chief support of the inhabitants is derived from the weaving of coarse linens, and from the salmon fishery which is co-extensive with the parish along the coast; the fish captured here are mostly sent to the London market. The City of Glasgow Banking Company have opened a branch here, and the Eastern bank have also a branch open for the transaction of business every Wednesday. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and Baptist and Presbyterian chapels.

FORGAN parish extends four miles in length by two in breadth, lying near the mouth of the Tay; having Ferry-Port-on-Craig on the east, Leuchars and Kilmeny on the south, and Balmerino on the west. The land generally declines to the Tay from an elevated back-ground, and is now well cultivated, inclosed, and beautifully wooded. On the shore is NEWPORT, where there is a small harbour and ferry-station opposite to Dundee. Adjacent is the Newport Inn, which will be found to afford ample comfort, and convenience to its visitants; a bowling green is connected. Handsome villas are erected on the slopes to the river, and a road cut to Ferry-Port-on-Craig; like that village, Forgan has a constant communication maintained with the Dundee side by ferry. The Kirk of Forgan, which is situate inland, is about ten miles distant from Cupar, and the like distance from St. Andrews. About one mile west from Newport is the small harbour of WOODHAVEN.

LEUCHARS parish is nine miles in length by five in breadth; bounded on the east by the German ocean, and watered by the Eden on the south and south-west. The surface is level, and the soil tolerably fertile. There is an extensive distillery in the parish. The village of Leuchars is pleasantly situated about a mile from the coast, and six from St. Andrews, on the road from that town to Dundee. The majority of the inhabitants are employed in the linen manufacture. The Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway passes through the parish, and there is a station in the village. The church is very ancient, and considered one of the most perfect specimens of Saxon architecture in Scotland; it is supposed to have been erected in the twelfth century; there is also a Free church in the parish

INVERKEITHING,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND HAMLETS OF NORTH QUEENSFERRY, ST. DAVID'S, FORDELL, HILLEND, JAMES TOWN, ROSYTH, DALGETTY, CROSSGATES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

INVERKEITHING is a royal burgh, a sea-port and the capital of its parish, 14 miles N.W. from Edinburgh 31 S. from Perth, 13 S.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 4 from Dunfermline—the last named place, and Halbeath and Crossgates, are the nearest railway stations. It is most agreeably seated at the inner side of the bay of the Firth of Forth, on an acclivity springing from the margin of the bay, and about two miles from North Queensferry, on the great road from Edinburgh to Perth, Aberdeen, &c. Its site commands an extensive view of the south bank of the Forth, with all that is grand and picturesque in the scenery of Mid-Lothian—Edinburgh, with its magnificently seated castle and fine buildings, lofty spires and towering monuments, bounds the eastern prospect, which is truly majestic when the morning sun beams on Arthur's Seat or Salisbury Craigs; while the passing and repassing of vessels on the river, and others lying at anchor, or moored in the harbour, add greatly to the beauty of the survey. So early as the days of David I., Inverkeithing was a royal residence, and received a charter of confirmation in the reign of William the Lion. There are many remains of antiquity, some of which are coeval with the earliest periods of Scottish history. The old castle of Rosyth, the celebrated residence of Margaret, spouse of Malcolm Canmore, and subsequently of the Stuart family, still resists the fury of the storm, and rears its venerable head amidst the waters of the Forth; it is the property of the Earl of Hopetoun, whose noble mansion stands on the opposite shore, each gaining by the contrast—the one preserved in stately magnificence, and the other a mighty skeleton.

The town consists chiefly of two streets, which are well paved and gas-lighted: lately, improvements generally have been made, and the thoroughfares now display some excellent and well furnished shops. There is a neat town-house, which comprises a goalt and suitable apartments for the courts. The first existing charter of Inverkeithing is one from William the Lion, confirming charters of earlier but unknown dates, a number of intervening charters were confirmed by one from James VI., in 1598. The government is vested in a provost or high sheriff, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, elected by the councillors. The expense of paving, lighting, the supply of water, &c., is defrayed from the corporation funds. The burgh, in conjunction with Dunfermline, Stirling, Culross, and Queen's Ferry, sends one member to the Imperial parliament. Besides the usual trades found in a respectable country town, there are established here two iron foundries, and a steam engine and boiler manufactory—and at the latter, iron vessels are constructed. Fire-bricks, tiles, and fire-clay gas retorts are made extensively by Mr. Fraser; and tanning, rope making, and iron and wood ship building, are other businesses—connected with the latter branch, is a patent slip, of great use in repairing vessels Halbeath and Townhill coals are shipped to the extent of about 50,000 to 80,000 tons per annum; the superior quality of these coals brings a high price. Freestone and whinstone are abundant in this neighbourhood and of excellent quality, and considerable quantities of each are annually exported. The harbour is capacious, and the bay is noted as a place of security in all winds; and the private harbour of East Ness belonging to the Halbeath Colliery is being extended, so as to afford additional accommodation, and give about eighteen feet water at spring tides. There are thirty vessels belonging to the port. A branch of the 'Eastern Bank of Scotland' is established in Inverkeithing, affording great convenience to the monetary transactions of the commercial inhabitants.

The places of worship are a church of the establishment, and one for an United Presbyterian congregation. There is a public school of the burgh, in which the languages, mathematics, and the usual branches of education are taught; and there are some private schools of a respectable grade, and societies for the propogation of christianity. A handsome music hall has recently been erected. A fair is held on the first Friday in August.

NORTH QUEENSFERRY, in the parish of Inverkeithing, is well known to travellers as the port and point of land opposite to Queensferry (or South Queensferry) in Linlithgowshire, and a steamer passes between the two every half-hour. A short distance to the west of the village is the anchorage ground, resorted to by vessels in stress of weather or contrary winds—called Saint Margaret's hope. Here is a station of the coast-guard, and it is a fishing one for a kind of sprat, of which, prodigious quantities are taken.

SAINT DAVIDS is a small port about a mile and a half to the east of Inverkeithing. The rise of this place may be mainly ascribed to the advantages it affords for the shipment of coal, brought from the extensive collieries at FORDELL by means of a railway five miles in length. At the pier, here, which has been extended at a cost of from £4,000 to £5,000; upwards of 500 tons of coal can be shipped daily; and there is an average depth of eighteen feet at high water—being greater than that of any other port on this part of the coast, and will admit vessels of five hundred tons to receive their cargoes at the pier; it is the property of George William Mercer Henderson, Esq. Fire-brick and tile making, and ship-building, are the only branches carried on here.

HILLEND, JAMES TOWN and ROSYTH, are hamlets, situated from about a mile to a mile and a half from Inverkeithing. There is nothing worthy of particular remark attached to either. A parish school for Dalgetty, recently erected, is situated at the eastern extremity of Hillend.

DALGETTY is a parish, and formerly a village, lying to the east of Inverkeithing; this district is rich in coal, of which, great quantities are exported from St. Davids. In this parish are the ruins of Fordell Castle (erected 1111), with its beautiful grounds and waterfall, it is well worthy of notice from the tourist.

CROSSGATES is a village in the parish of Inverkeithing, four miles north from that town; situated about a quarter of a mile from a station on the branch of the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway. The inhabitants are principally employed in the collieries surrounding the village.

The places of worship are the established church and an United Presbyterian chapel; also a subscription school.

KETTLE,

BALMALCOLM, PITLESSIE, AND COLLESSIE.

KETTLE is a parish and village—the latter 17 miles s. from Dundee, and four from Falkland, standing about a quarter of a mile off the main road from Edinburgh to Cupar, nearly six miles from the latter town. The Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway passes through the village at which there is a station. The name of Kettle is of very obscure etymology; it was anciently called Katul, and in common phraseology it is invariably entitled 'the Kettle.' At one period the parish was denominated King's Kettle, from being the property of the crown. This district forms a large portion of that rich and beautiful territory on the north side of the Howe of Fife, it is exceedingly fertile throughout, with a slight exception. The river Eden bounds the parish on nearly the whole of its northern side. The inhabitants of the village are chiefly occupied in weaving. The church, which is a handsome building with a square tower, was erected in 1832. Besides the Established church, there is a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel. In this parish, about half a mile from the village is the hamlet of BALMALCOLM.

PITLESSIE is a small village in the parish of Cults two miles from Kettle; situated on the road between Kirkcaldy and Cupar, 4 miles from the latter town. The occupation of the inhabitants is of the same nature as those of Kettle. The parish of Cults abounds in coal, lime, and freestone, and it is generally well cultivated and enclosed. The parish is chiefly in the Howe of Fife, on the south bank of the Eden, having Ceres on the east, Kettle on the west, and Monimail on the north. The principal ornaments of this district are the mansion-house and beautifully disposed pleasure grounds and plantations of Crawford Priory, which lie on the west side of the road to Cupar. Wilkie, the justly celebrated painter, was a native of the parish, his father having been minister of Cults. The ancient name of the parish was Guilkes, which signifies a nook or corner, it being disjointed from the large strath which runs from east to west along the bank of the Eden.

COLLESSIE is a parish, lying to the north of that of Kettle, eight miles in length by five in breadth; consisting chiefly of fine enclosed lands, and some fine plantations rising from the Eden to the hills on the north. The village, of no importance in the way of business, is situated three miles from Auchtermuchty, and six from Cupar; the railway before mentioned passes through it. The parish church is a neat building surmounted by a spire.

CARRIER

To CUPAR, John Forrest, from Pitlissie, Tuesday

KILCONQUHAR, WITH EARL'S FERRY, BARNYARDS,

COLINSBURGH, ELIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of KILCONQUHAR lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, extending in an oblong form between seven and eight miles from north to south, and varying from two to nearly five miles in breadth. The surface rises from the south, and the soil varies gradually as it recedes from the coast. The flat part of the south is a sandy soil, the rest being all of an upland character. There are many beautiful seats in the parish, of which Balcarras, the residence of Sir Coutts Lindsay, Bart. is the chief; and there are other elegant mansions also deserving notice. Kilconquhar loch is a fine sheet of water, three quarters of a mile in length, and nearly the same in breadth, with two small islands, which harbour many swans and wild fowl. Fairs are held 14th May and 8th November. This parish contains four villages, namely, KILCON-

QUHAR, EARL'S FERRY (a burgh), BARNYARDS, and COLINSBURGH. The latter which is the principal village, is 17 miles from Kirkcaldy, 11 from Cupar, the like distance from St. Andrew's, four from Largo, one from Kilconquhar and Barnyards, and two miles S.W. from Elie. Colinsburgh is a village of some trade, having a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, a good inn, and several well-furnished shops Besides the parish church, and an United Presbyterian chapel, at Kilconquhar, there is also one of the latter here. In the village a weekly corn market is held on Thursday, and fairs on the second Tuesday in March, and the second Thursday in June and October.

ELIE is a small parish, being only about a square mile in extent, bounded on the north and west by Kilconquhar, and on the east by St. Monance, lying on the coast of the Frith of Forth. The whole, which is enclosed, is the property of William Baird, Esq. who has here an elegant residence. The village of Elie is six miles E. of Largo, one mile and a half from Kilconquhar, two and a half from Colinsburgh, and the same distance from St. Monance. It stands so near the sea, that the waves wash the walls of some of the houses. The harbour is said to be the deepest on the Frith of Forth, except that of Burntisland. The beach is here very fine and sandy; and the bathing being excellent, many persons resort here in the summer from distant parts, but at other times it is destitute of attraction, although at some earlier period it must have been a place of more importance than it now is; for in one of the streets near the sea there are some substantial ancient residences, evidently once the habitation of families of distinction. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and an Independent chapel. A new, handsome and commodious parish school and masters' residence, have recently been erected north of the town. The trade of the place is confined to the export of grain and potatoes, there is also a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, and at Earl's Ferry village, which joins with Elie, the weaving of ticks and checks for distant houses, and the coal works are the chief employment and support of its inhabitants.

KINGHORN, PETTY-CUR, AUCHTERTOOL,
AND NEIGHBOURHOODS,

KINGHORN is a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh; three miles and a half from Kirkcaldy, and two and a half from Burntisland; occupying a pleasant situation on the side of a hill, sloping to the Frith of Forth, and exactly opposite to Leith, and on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway. It consists principally of one main street, intersected by others of minor importance. An elegant edifice was erected some years ago, answering the purpose of a town house. Another public erection, worthy of notice, is a handsome new school house; it contains school rooms, and a library and museum. Kinghorn was invested with the privileges of a royal burgh by King David I., and about that time it is said to have been a royal residence. In consequence of non-election of councillers in terms of the sett of the burgh; the government is now vested in five managers, a treasurer, town clerk, &c. The courts formerly held here have been transferred to Kirkcaldy. The burgh in conjunction with those of Dysart, Kirkcaldy, and Burntisland, returns one member to parliament. The principal business carried on here is flax spinning, for which Messrs. Swan Brothers have two mills—and others at Kirkcaldy; they have likewise a large and powerful corn-mill. A brewery, and the manufacture of glue are the other notable branches. The harbour has fallen to decay, and the nearest, now, is about half a mile distant, at PETTY-CUR, which for many years was the ferry-place for Edinburgh, now transferred to Burntisland. The island of Inchkeith, distant about three miles from Petty-cur, has the appearance of a barren rock; on visiting it, however, both arable and pasture lands are discovered. It also contains a small harbour and a light-house, for the security of vessels sailing up the Frith. About a mile to the eastward is the Kirkcaldy combination poorhouse for the parish of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall hall, Burntisland and Kinghorn; it occupies a commanding situation near the coast. Further particulars will be found in the account of Kirkcaldy. We may also state for the curious, that this poorhouse was the first institution of the kind assessed for poor rates in Scotland. The case arose in consequence of the three parishes refusing to pay the rates assessed by the parish of Kinghorn. The case after being heard before the Lord Ordinary was upon appeal carried to the second division of the court of session, and decree given in favour of Kinghorn. The expenses in the case amounting to nearly £300, being defrayed by the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall and Burntisland. The places of worship are a church of the establisment, a Free church, and an United Presbyterian chapel; and the educational institutions are a school connected with the Free church; and for infants, and 'Philp's Institution.'

AUCHTERTOOL, a small inland parish, about two miles in length and one in breadth; the situation is elevated, and commands an extensive prospect. From a little lake, called Camilla loch, the river Teel takes its rise; on the verge of the loch are the ruins of Camilla Castle, or 'Hall-yards.' The distillery belonging to Mr. James Liddell, is situated in the village. The parish contains a small village, of the same name, which is about four miles west of Kirkcaldy. Auchterteel is said to have been the original name of the parish, deriving the appellation from its situation on the banks of the Teel.

KIRKCALDY WITH ABBOTSHALL,
AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKCALDY is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, a populous thriving sea-port, and the capital of its parish; 14 miles N. from Edinburgh, 33 S. W. from Dundee, and 6 from Burntisland—(all rail distances), on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee line, the station of which is contigous to the town. It is situated on the northern shore of the Firth of Forth, and stretches along the base of a range of rising grounds to the extent of about a mile. From the narrow dimensions of the site on which the town stands, the inhabitants have from the first been necessitated to build their habitations in a continuous line along the shore, though without much regard to the regularity of their structure; and having thence elongated most disproportionately, the place from an early period has been styled 'the lang town o'Kirka'dy,' in familiar allusion to its appearance. Though formerly limited to this long street, and a few diverging narrow lanes, houses were in time erected on the ascent behind, or near to the shore in front; and it now comprises several well-built cross streets, and detached dwellings, the residences of the more opulent classes: so that, when viewed from the sea, the town appears environed by finely-enclosed productive fields, ornamented by the beautiful grounds and conspicuous tower of Raith, (the residence of Robert Ferguson, Esq. M. P. for the burgh), and the grounds surrounding the elegant mansion of Dunniker, the seat of James T. Oswald, Esq. The prospect from the heights is of a different character, but equally delightful—embracing, as it does, the town and landscape immediately beneath and around, with a view of the busy waters of the Firth of Forth.

From a remote date the town of Kirkcaldy has sustained great vicissitudes and fluctuations in its commerce and prosperity. When Charles I. erected it anew into a royal burgh, it had, according to tradition, one hundred ships belonging to it, and ranked as the sixth place of maritime importance in Scotland; but, in 1673, the number of vessels in its possession had decreased to twenty-five; and in 1682 its distress was so deplorable, that an application was made to the convention of burghs to consider its poverty, and to take measures for relieving it as to its public burdens. On the return of peace, in 1763, the trade to the port revived, and the quantity of shipping consequently increased and progressively augmented, so that in 1792 it boasted twenty-six vessels; from this period, Kirkcaldy has gradually risen into repute, both as a port and a manufacturing town. The number of vessels belonging to the port at the present time is sixty-two of an aggregate burthen of 6,657 tons. The principal importation are flax and grain. Vessels from this port have been employed in the Davis Straits whale-fishery for many years, and there are three vessels at the present time engaged on that trade. A branch rail from the main line traverses the entire length of the harbour—a great convenience to operations of loading and unloading vessels. There is a wet dock in which ships lie afloat, which is a great convenience. The pier of late years has been run out three hundred feet. The average depth of water is twelve feet at neap tides, and eighteen at spring tides. This port is the seat of a custom-house having control over a line of coast extending from Aberdour on the west to Saint Andrews on the east. The prominent trade of Kirkcaldy bears an intimate affinity with that of Dundee, consisting of the spinning of flax and the weaving of linen goods, for home and foreign consumption; striped hollands, dowlas, ticks, checks, sailcloths, &c., are amongst the fabrics produced from the looms of this town; the other branches include a large floor cloth manufactory, brewing, ironfounding, machine making, and a considerable corn and meal trade. There are several power loom factories for linen goods, and two extensive nursery grounds. Coal is extensively worked in the vicinity of the town; also fire brick, and tile clay fields are in operation. The general commerce of the place is assisted by resident branches of five banking establishments, namely, the 'National Bank of Scotland,' the 'Commercial Bank of Scotland,' the 'Bank of Scotland,' the 'Union Bank of Scotland,' and the 'City of Glasgow Bank.' There is also a branch of the 'National Security Savings Bank.' There are now many elegant shops, with extensive stocks of fashionable, ornamental, and useful goods; and excellent inns—amongst these 'the George' is the most prominent, visitors and commercial gentlemen will find every accommodation, a posting establishment being attached

The civic government of the town is confided to a provost, two baillies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer; the council consists of twenty-one members. The burgh is conjoined with Kinghorn, Dysart and Burntisland in sending one member to parliament. The chief magistrate is Provost and admiral, and is assisted by assessors of admiralty. There is also a board of harbour commissioners, of which the Provost is chairman. The paving, watering and lighting is under the management of burgh trustees; the Provost being chairman. In 1829 was completed, and has superseded the old town-house, a handsome building of large dimensions containing a hall for burgh and district meetings; a burgh court, and record rooms; an office for the town clerk, and other apartments. The sherriff holds a circuit courts here on the first Friday of every alternate month, under the small debts' act; and the justices of the peace, likewise sit on the first Monday monthly for adjudicating claims under other pecuniary acts, The foundation stone of a new corn exchange in Cowan street was laid with masonic honours in May 1859, The union poor-house is a conspicuous building beautifully situated on the lands of Abden, in the parish of Kinghorn, commanding an extensive view of the Firth of the Forth. It was erected in 1849, capable of accommodating 150 paupers, and was opened for the reception of inmates in May, 1850. The original cost of the erection was £4,877, exclusive of furniture and other furnishings, but in consequence of alterations and additional buildings the total cost considerably exceeded £5,000. It is the joint property of the parishes of Kirkcaldy, Abbotshall, Burntisland, and Kinghorn, nearly half being held by the parish of Kirkcaldy, a fourth by the parish of Abbotshall, and the rest between the parishes of Burntisland and Kinghorn. The population of the combined parishes in 1851 was 16,937, but since that time the number has very much increased and may now be fairly set down at nearly 20,000. The erection of this union poorhouse has had a beneficial effect in checking the growth of pauperism in the district. A list of the officials will be found under the head, Public buildings.

The church, which is in the Gothic style, stands on an eminence above and at the back of the town; the other places of worship are a free church, and chapels for United Presbyterians, Baptists and Independents. The principal educational establishments besides the parochial or burgh school, (a handsome building erected in 1844), is Philp's Institution for instructing children of both sexes, selected from among those of the poorest inhabitants; in connection with this charity there are schools at Path-head, Abbotshall, and Kinghorn. The property bequeathed by Mr. Philp for erecting and sustaining schools in these places is estimated at nearly £70,000. In virtue of this munificent endowment, a school-house was erected in Thistle street, at an expence of £2 400, it is a neat building in the Grecian style; and others have been erected in different localities. The pupils are admitted between the ages of six and fifteen, and are taught only the plainest elementary branches; thirty shillings per annum is allowed for clothing each pupil. There is also a charitable trust by John Thomson, for educating poor children, and for annuities for the support of poor inhabitants. The inhabitants of this respectable town support a working mens' reading room, a subscription library, and mechanics' institution: a newspaper called the 'Advertiser' is published here every Saturday. There is a neatly laid out bowling green close to the town. The market, which is a stockmarket. for the sale of grain, and is the most important in the county is held on Saturday. Fairs on the third Fridays in February, April, and July, and the first Friday in October.

ABBOTSHALL although a distinct parish, may be said to form almost an integral part of Kirkcaldy, for its principal street called the Links, (nearly a mile long), runs west in a direct line with the High street of the town named. The trade and manufactures are of the same character as those of Kirkcaldy; and more immediately in Abbotshall are dye works, an earthenware manufactory, and a large corn mill. The places of worship are Established and Free churches; and the the schools are parochial, 'Philp's institution', and subscription. The general appearance of the parish, the extent of which is about two miles either way, is very agreeable, rising gradually from the coast northward into tolerably high grounds. Raith House, before noticed, is in this parish.

LARGO (UPPER AND NETHER), AND LUNDIN MILL.

LARGO parish lies on the shore of the Frith of Forth, betwixt Newburn and Kilconquhar on the east, and Leven on the west—its inland quarter being bounded by Ceres. The parish contains three villages, one called UPPER (or KIRKTOWN of) LARGO, NETHER LARGO, and LUNDIN MILL; the first is situated a mile from the sea, on the road leading from Leven to Anstruther—3 miles from the former, 9 from the latter, 11 from St. Andrews, 9 from Cupar, and 10 and a half from Dysart. In Upper Largo, which is a very agreeable little village, stands the parish church, an ancient Gothic fabric, with a spire rising from the centre. This was the birth-place of the celebrated Scottish admiral, Sir Andrew Wood, who, in the reign of James IV., defeated the English fleet under Stephen Bull. The East of Fife railway passes within a short distance of the village, where there is a station. A hospital, which stands in the village, was erected by means of an endowment by a Mr. John Wood a native of the place; it is a handsome building, in the Gothic style. The intention of the founder was one of a peculiar nature—any man 'of the name of Wood' may have admission here, to whatever part of Scotland he may belong. The foundation provides the inmates with beds and bedding, the produce of the gardens, and £15 per annum. The National Bank of Scotland has a sub-branch, and a savings' bank is also established.

NETHER LARGO is a fishing village, one mile from Upper Largo, seated at the head of an indentation of the Frith of Forth, called Largo bay; it stands at the influx of a rivulet named the Keil, whose estuary forms a harbour to the place. This village would have remained amongst the most obscure of coast villages but from the circumstance of its having been the birthplace of Alexander Selkirk, rendered famous by the pen of De Foe as 'Robinson Crusoe.' The house in which Selkirk was born still exists; it is an ordinary cottage of one storey and a garret, and is stationed on the north side of the main street of Largo. A descendant of this person and of the same name (Alexander Selkirk) is at this time a resident in the village, and possesses the chest once belonging to the hero of De Foe, together with the cup (formed out of a cocoa-nut) from which he drunk. The gun with which he killed his game was sold some years ago, and is now in the possession of the family of Lumsdanes, near Colinsburgh. The weaving of linen goods occupies several of the inhabitants of these villages. In the parish are edifices for congregations of the Established and Free churches and Baptist and United Presbyterians. With the churches, schools are connected. On the east bank of the Keil are the ruins of the ancient castle of Balcruvie.

POST OFFICE, UPPER LARGO, John Muir, Post Master.—Letters arrive (from LEVEN) every morning at twenty-five minutes past nine, and are despatched thereto at five minutes before nine in the evening.

Letters arrive (from COLINSBURGH, KILCONQUHAR, and ELIE at nine in the evening, and are despatched thereto at half-past nine in the morning.

LESLIE,

Is a burgh of barony, and manufacturing town, 12 miles E. from Kinross, the like distance S.W. from Cupar, 9 N.W. from Kirkcaldy, and 3 W. from Markinch, a station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway. It is seated along the summit of a ridge of ground rising from the Leven on the southern and a shallow vale on the northern side, and situated on the public road up the vale of Leven, leading into Kinrossshire. It consists principally of one street, running from east to west; the steps to the upper flats are on the outside of some of the houses, which is a great inconvenience to foot-passengers; many of them, however, have been improved of late years. It is a very ancient place, often frequented by the James's when holding court at Falkland; and here is the scene laid of the song of the 'Jolly Beggars.' Of its age, the irregularity of the streets, and architecture of the houses (being built with the gable end to the street), are proofs. Nearly all the dwellings are provided with gardens behind, and the environs display much rural beauty—the streets of the town are gas-lighted. At the eastern entrance to the town is a pleasant public 'green,' of a triangular figure; in former times, this area was the scene of various pastimes, and the place of annual meeting of the pedlars or packmen of Scotland. Many improvements have been made in the burgh within the last fifty years, and during that period its size has been nearly doubled—this vast increase is attributable to the prosperity of its manufactures, consisting of linens and woollens, flax spinning, paper making and bleaching: the works of these, are chiefly established on the banks of the Leven—where also are corn mills, and a saw mill of considerable dimensions. A branch railway, now in course of construction, will run from the west end of the town to join the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway, at Markinch. A branch of the 'Union Bank of Scotland' was opened here in 1850; and there is a savings' bank, in which there are 120 depositors, with accumulations amounting to upwards of £2,000.

Leslie is governed by two baillies and sixteen councillors; the Countess of Rothes, who is superior of the burgh, has a seat, 'Leslie House,' at the eastern end of the town; around the mansion are some fine pleasure grounds and agreeable plantations.

The places of worship are the parish church, a plain structure with a spire; a Free church, and two Presbyterian chapels; there are three or four public schools in the parish, and a private one. A new United Presbyterian church in course of erection will cost £2,253. The Established church Sabbath school is attended by 300 children, conducted by 18 teachers. There is also a library established under the title of the "Leslie Institute Library:" it consists of 850 vols. of valuable books. One of the rules of the library is that it can never be dissolved, its laws being like that of the Medes and Persians, unalterable. The inhabitants of Leslie have for years taken pride to themselves for their upright dealing. Although upwards of 1,500 people are employed in public works, scarcely a case of discipline has occurred for years, and until 1856 no lawyer ever could find a footing, and even yet the business is not a paying one. Fairs are held here on the first Tuesday in April, the Wednesday next before Michaelmas (old style), and on the first Friday in October. The April fair is considered the largest in the kingdom of Fife.

POST OFFICE, Elizabeth Eason, Post Mistress.—Letters arrive from all parts (from MARKINCH) every morning at twenty minutes to ten, and in the evening at ten minutes to six; and are despatched thereto every morning at ten minutes to six, and in the afternoon at ten minutes past two.

LEVEN WITH INNER LEVEN.

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LEVEN is a town in the parish of Scoonie, nine miles from Kirkcaldy, four from Wemyss, and three from Largo, situate on the coast of the Frith of Forth, on the mouth of the river Leven, from which the place takes its name. The town consists of three principal streets, irregularly built, but contains some good houses; with several lanes and detached mansions. A number of elegant villas have been recently erected at the Links, a little to the east of the town, and several handsome mansions have lately been built in the neighbourhood. A branch railway from Thornton station on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee railway, now gives the town the benefit and facility of that mode of transit. Recently this branch railway has been extended east to Elie, The town has also the benefit of a harbour, but it is not much resorted to in consequence of the bad entrance and limited accommodation at the quay. The entrance and harbour are, however, capable of improvement. The principal imports are flax, tow, barley, and timber. Of late years the town has been greatly improved, and its trade materially augmented; so that Leven may now be pronounced one of the most thriving of the small towns in the county of Fife. Over the Leven, and connecting this town with the village of INNER LEVEN, is a handsome stone bridge. The staple trade of Leven is the preparation and spinning of flax, and the weaving of linens; the mills of the former, especially, employing a considerable number of hands. The Durie ironfoundry, a concern long established, is very extensive, and produces specimens of work that may compete with any of a similar kind in Scotland, the proprietors of these works, Messrs. Balfour & Co., manufacture both for the home trade and exportation. Close to the town are the Hawkslaw works of Messrs. A. Boswall & Co., hemp and flax spinners. For the spinning and making herring net twine they have long been deservedly famed; they have recently added to their extensive works machinery for the manufacture of herring nets, and from the accurate and beautiful work made, they must ere long place hand-made nets amongst the things that were. They also manufacture largely for home and export. At the last issue of this publication they employed about 50 hands, now they employ upwards of 400. A distillery belonging to Messrs. Haig & Co., a bone-dust mill, corn mills, bleach fields, the manufacture of bricks and tiles, and rope making, are the other leading branches carried on here and in the vicinity. There are three branch banking houses, and several fire and life agency offices. During the summer months, Leven is the resort of a number of respectable families from Edinburgh and the interior, for the benefit of sea bathing; and at the same season there is a daily communication with Largo, Dysart, and Newhaven, by means of steam-vessels. 'Crawford's Hotel,' the principal of the kind, affords superior accommodation either to families, tourists, or commercial gentlemen, to which has been added posting in all its branches.

Leven is a burgh of barony, and is governed by a baron bailie, appointed by the superior, Mr. Christie, of Durie. The purposes of lighting, cleaning and water are carried out in the burgh by commissioners appointed under the General Police Act for Scotland, which was some time ago adopted here. The sheriff holds a small debt circuit court here every three months, namely, on second Friday of March, first Friday of June, and the last Fridays of August and November.

The parish church of Scoonie, which is one of the plainest in the shire, stands close to the town; a Free church, and Presbyterian and Independent chapels are the other places of worship. A Parochial and Free church schools, with some private academies are the educational establishments. Between the decayed town of Methil and the mouth of the Leven, there are

Some fine open downs on which a golfing society exercise their healthful amusement, and annually play for a gold and a silver medal. To the east of Leven there are also fine open downs or links where the game of Golf is daily practised by the members of the Leven Golf club and others. Fairs, the second Wednesday in April, o. s. the first Wednesday in July, and third Wednesday in October.

POST OFFICE, Penelope Matthews, Post Mistress,—Letters arrive every morning (from EDINBURGH, and all parts) at half-past eight. From EDINBURGH only at half-past twelve. From EDINBURGH and the NORTH every afternoon at twenty minutes past five.

Letters from CRAIL, ANSTRUTHER, COLINSBURGH, LARGO, &c., every evening at half-past nine, and are despatched to EDINBURGH and all parts every morning at half-past six, and in the afternoon at half-past three.

LIMEKILNS, BRUCEHAVEN AND CHARLESTOWN.

LIMEKILNS with BRUCEHAVEN is a small sea-port, in the parish of Dumferline, three miles south of that town, situated on the north bank of the Frith of Forth. It was at one period a place of considerable trade, but at the present day its excellent harbour is chiefly made use of for the mooring of vessels. Ship building is carried on at Brucehaven ship-yard, and many beautiful clipper-built vessels have been launched here. Several owners of vessels, employed in the coasting trade, reside here; and there is an association for the insurance of vessels. A congregation of United Presbyterians have a chapel here.

A short distance from Limekilns is the village and port of CHARLESTOWN, the property of the Earl of Elgin, who has formed a commodious harbour and pier, and built residences for the men employed at his extensive lime works in the vicinity: from hence enormous quantities of limestone are exported annually; it is likewise the shipping port for the Elgin and Wellwood collieries. The accommodation found at the harbour here, for loading and unloading vessels, are most excellent. Manufactories for salt, an iron foundry, a fire-brick work, a steam saw mill and timber yard, are among the other businesses of this flourishing little place.

POST OFFICE, LIMEKILNS, Richard Barber, Post Master.—Letters from all parts arrive (from DUNFERMLINE) every forenoon at twelve, and five in the evening, and are despatched thereto at a quarter-past six in the morning, and in the afternoon at two.

MARKINCH, KENNOWAY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MARKINCH is a parish and villlage—the latter, a station on the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway, is situated near the centre of the parish, at the distance of 10 miles s. from Cupar, and 8 N. E. from Kirkcaldy, and between 6 and 7 miles from Leven; it occupies an open situation, on a piece of irregular rising ground; and on the highest part of the eminence is seated the church. A branch line of railway to join the Edinburgh, Perth and Dundee railway, now in course of construction, is to connect this place with Leslie. Flax spinning is the principal employment of the inhabitants. In the neighbourhood are paper and corn mills, a woollen manufactory, and bleach fields, and the weaving of linen, and the district around abounds in coal; a sub-branch of the Commercial bank of Scotland is established here. The places of worship comprises a church of the establishment, a Free church and a chapel for the United Presbyterians—with the first and second schools are connected.

The parish of Markinch is bounded by Kennoway on the east; on the west by Dysart, Kinglassie, and Leslie; on the north by Falkland and Kettle, and on the south by Wemyss; it extends from north to south five miles and a half, by a mean breadth of two, its southern end being considerably wider. The parish has a general slope towards the south; it is under the best state of cultivation, enclosure, and plantation—and must be ranked amongst the most beautiful parts of this shire: it is traversed by the streams of the Leven and the Or, and the great road through the county, crosses it. The Edinburgh, Perth & Dundee railway is carried over the first-named river by means of a handsome viaduct of ten arches, nearly ninety feet in height. The parish contains Balgonie Castle, one of the seats of the Earl of Leven, and from whence his eldest son takes the title of baron: the castle is an edifice of great antiquity and strength; it stands on the south bank of the Leven, in the midst of some fine woods. About half a mile to the east is the castle of Balfour, surrounded by pleasing plantations and enclosures; and in a delightful situation is the house (or castle) of Balbirnie, a good substantial mansion. Fairs second Tuesday in February, last Tuesday in March, second Tuesday in May, second Tuesday in July, second Friday in October, and third Tuesday in December, and on the second Tuesday in March at Windygates in this parish.

KENNOWAY parish, which lies to the east of Markinch, is three miles long and two broad, situated on an acclivity rising from the south to the north. It commands a delightful and extensive prospect, from its southern side, of the Firth of Forth, its islands, and the Lothians; while, from the northern extremity, the view extends over the greater part of the counties of Fife, Angus and Perth, and includes the Grampian mountains. The village of Kennoway is situated about three miles from that of Markinch, and the same distance from Leven, at the head of a beautiful and romantic glen, the sides of which are precipitous and rocky, and contains caves, which were probably used as places of refuge, or retreat for marauders, in ancient times. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a chapel of the United Presbyterians. With the first named a school is connected.

NEWBURGH,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABDIE, BALMERINO AND CREICH.

NEWBURGH is a royal burgh, sea-port and the capital of its parish, 15 miles S.W. from Dundee, 11 S.E. from Perth, 10 N.W. from Cupar, and 5 N. from Auchtermuchty, situated on the line of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Railway, and on the south bank of the Tay. It consists of one long street in the direction of east and west, parallel with the course of the river, and a lane or two leading towards the shore, where there are convenient quays for the shipping of merchandise, and a spacious harbour; the Tay above, being navigable only for vessels of about two hundred tons; those of greater burthen put in here to discharge their cargoes, which are sent to Perth by lighters. That the town is of considerable antiquity is unquestionable; according to some authorities, is origin is ascribed to the fostering patronage of the adjacent abbey of Lindores, founded in 1178, by David Earl of Huntingdon on his return from the Holy Land. The unfortunate Duke of Rothsay, who was starved to death in Falkland Palace, was buried here. The ruins are a little eastward of the town. Several stone coffins have at different times been discovered, and are still to be seen. The name of New-burgh is supposed to be conferred upon it in contradistinction to the ancient decayed burgh of Abernethy, which lies about two miles to the west. Formerly the greater proportion of the habitations were low-built and roofed with thatch, but of late years a better style of architecture has prevailed, and there are now many good houses. The town hall, which stands near the centre of the town, is a neat modern building; and the church, nearly opposite to it, is a handsome new edifice.

In the year 1266 the town was erected into a burgh of regality, and in 1631 Charles I. granted to the place a charter, forming the community into a royal burgh; in virtue of which grant Newburgh is said to have sent a commissioner to the Scottish estates, but being unable to pay his expenses, which was then the custom, the burgh, upon petition, was relieved from the burden of parliamentary distinction, and it has never since been oppressed by representative honours. There is, however at the present time, no evidence of it ever having sent a member to the Scottish parliament. There are two ancient crosses within the parish, one at Mugdrum, about 13 feet high, and Macduff cross, or rather pedestal of it, of great interest, from its having been granted to Macduff as a sanctuary for his successful aid against Macbeth. The government is vested in two bailies and fifteen councillors, with a treasurer and a town clerk. Within the last fifty years Newburgh has risen very considerably in wealth and outward appearance through the industrious habits of its population, and the traffic carried on at its port. The manufacture of linen goods may be considered the staple of the place, exclusive of which the trade in corn and timber is by no means inconsiderable: of the former especially, large exports are made. To the parish of Newburgh many interesting particulars belong, which our confined space will not allow us to notice, but which the reader will find amply detailed in Messrs.

Chambers' excellent Gazetteer. The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and two United Presbyterian chapels. There are several schools in the parish. The parochial school, the pupils, of which in addition to the ordinary branches are taught Latin, Greek, Hebrew, mathematics and navigation. A new school, a neat and handsome building, conducted on the Madras principle was erected two years ago at the east end of the town, with funds from Dr. Bells trust, private subscriptions, and government aid. Fairs are held on the third Friday in June, and on the first Tuesday in December, for hiring servants.

ABDIE parish, which is of considerable extent, but greatly intersected by other parishes, lies on the north bank of the river Tay, amongst those highlands to the westward, which have acquired the appellation of the Ochill hills. The surface is remarkably uneven, but the soil is in general fertile. It possesses three quarries of granite, of which considerable quantities are shipped for paving the streets of London. The parish is well watered with lochs, the chief of which is the lake of Lindores, about a mile in length, and of irregular breadth. This piece of water is well stored with fish, and being surrounded by some romantic scenery, is a beautiful object in the view of the country.

BALMERINO or Balmerinoch (pronounced Ba'mirnie) is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Tay, extending, on an average, about 3½ miles in length, and 2½ in breadth. The surface is a gradual decline to the side of the river. The harbour of Balmerino is small, but a considerable quantity of grain is annually exported from it. The kirk and little hamlet lie on the road along the high ground, from the ferry opposite Dundee, to Newburgh. To the west, and on a slip of ground intruding upon the waters of the Tay, stands the ancient village of Balmerino, adjacent to which are the ruins of the once famed abbey—a beautiful structure, begun by Alexander II. and his mother, Emergarde, daughter of the Earl of Beaumont, in 1229. These ruins, which are richly clothed with ivy, and surrounded with some fine tall trees, are much admired by strangers.

CRIECH parish is about three miles in length, and two in breadth. Its surface is nearly level, and the soil sandy and thin; but agriculture is making rapid improvements. On a little eminence near the church are the vestiges of a Roman camp, and at a short distance therefrom are the remains of a castle, which formerly belonged to Cardinal Beaton. This parish was the birthplace of the Rev. John Sage, the first of the post-revolution bishops in the Scottish episcopal communion, and the author of that very remarkable production, the 'Fundamental Charter of Presbytery.'
